Table of Contents

Acknowledgements ........................................................................................................... xi

Preface ............................................................................................................................. xiii

Chapter One

Introduction: The Male Problem of Child Sex Offending

A. The Research Issues ..................................................................................................... 1
B. Some Caveats ............................................................................................................... 4
C. An Historical Framework in which to Examine the Motivations of Male Child Sex Offenders ............................................................................................................. 4
   (i) Child Prostitution and the Sexual Slave Trade ......................................................... 6
   (ii) The Social Purity Movement in England and Australia ........................................... 8
   (iii) Protecting Men from False Accusations ................................................................ 17
   (iv) The Criminalisation of Incest in Australia ............................................................. 19
   (v) The Criminalisation of Incest in England ................................................................. 24
   (vi) Conclusion ............................................................................................................ 26
D. Definitions and Terminology Used in this Book ......................................................... 30

Chapter Two

Current Explanations of Child Sexual Abuse

Child Sex Offending: Violence, Sex, Power, Dysfunctional Families or Just Plain Deviance? ......................................................................................................................... 33
   (i) Introduction ............................................................................................................. 33
   (ii) An Analysis of Child Sexual Abuse as a Function of Family Pathology .................. 36
   (iii) Sexually Coercive Behaviour: A Case of Biological Propensity or Culturally Influenced Behaviour? ................................................................. 41
   (iv) The Relationship between Power and Child Sexual Abuse .................................... 48
   (v) Child Sexual Abuse as a Sociological Phenomenon ............................................. 54
   (vi) Psychological Theories of Child Sex Offenders and ‘Good’ and ‘Bad’ Masculine Sexuality ......................................................................................... 59
   (vii) The Characteristics of Child Sex Offenders ......................................................... 67
   (viii) The Multi-Factorial Analysis of Child Sexual Abuse .......................................... 71
   (ix) Conclusion ............................................................................................................ 86
Chapter Three
Masculinities and Sexualities: A Sociological Theory of Child Sexual Abuse

A. Introduction .................................................................................................................. 87
B. The Role of Power and Sexuality in the Making (and Unmaking) of Men ................. 94
   (i) Gender as Social Practice .................................................................................... 94
   (ii) Social Practices of Masculinity and Structures of Power ................................. 103
   (iii) The Centrality of Heterosexism to Masculine Sexual Ideals ................. 111
   (iv) Masculine Sexual Practices .............................................................................. 115
   (v) 'Pedosexuality' as a Specific Masculine Sexual Practice .............................. 123
   (vi) Blurring the Distinction between Pathology and Normality.................... 131
C. The Social Construction of Feminine Sexualities: .................................................. 135
D. Conclusion .................................................................................................................. 143

Chapter Four
The Masculine Sexual Practices of Child Sex Offenders: Testing the Power/Powerlessness Theory

A. Introduction .................................................................................................................. 148
B. Victim Report Studies and Child Sex Offender Profiles: ......................................... 149
   (i) Introduction ....................................................................................................... 149
   (ii) The Studies: What They Say about the Prevalence of Child Sexual Abuse .... 151
   (iii) The Studies: What They Say about Offender Types .................................... 154
   (iv) Conclusion: The Validity of the Fixated/Regressed Classification Scheme ...... 162
C. The Characteristics of Child Sex Offenders: Evidence of Deviance or Experiences of Powerlessness? ................................................................. 165
   (i) Introduction ....................................................................................................... 165
   (ii) Poor Social Skills, Loneliness, Isolation, Passivity, Low Self-Esteem and 'Deviant' Sexual Arousal: Do They Cause Child Sex Offending? ................. 167
   (iii) What is the Role of Alcohol in Child Sex Offending? .................................. 185
   (iv) Is an Experience of Child Sexual Abuse Causative in Child Sex Offending or Evidence of the Degree of Powerlessness Experienced by the Offender? .................................................. 186
   (v) Juvenile Onset of Child Sex Offending: A Function of Poor Social Skills or the Development of Masculine Sexual Practices in Adolescence? ............ 196
   (vi) Establishing Relations of Power: The Selection of Vulnerable Children ....... 200
   (x) Conclusion ......................................................................................................... 203