Contents

List of abbreviations ix
List of contributors xi
Acknowledgements xiii

1 Introduction 1
MARIE-BÉNÉDICTE DEMBOUR AND TOBIAS KELLY

1 The problem: why do migrants find it so difficult to access human rights? 6
2 What are the human rights we are referring to? 12
3 The role of human rights: the take of this volume’s contributors 18

PART I
Taking it as a given: the affirmation of the optimist 23

2 The recognition of migrants’ rights within the UN human rights system: the first 60 years 25
STEFANIE GRANT

1 The Universal Declaration of Human Rights: the protection of aliens 26
2 Transforming the UDHR into human rights treaties 28
3 Rights, sovereignty and non-refoulement 30
4 The protection of migrants: ‘unclear’ and ‘inadequate’ 32
5 Drafting the Migrant Workers’ Convention 35
6 Developments after 1990 39
7 Conclusion 46
3 Irregular migration and frontier deaths: acknowledging a right to identity

STEFANIE GRANT

1 Deaths on the ‘fault lines’ of migration: contexts and numbers 49
2 Border control’s ‘unintended side effects’ 52
3 The rights of irregular migrants: the legal framework 56
4 Irregular migration and loss of identity 60
5 Lost identity: the new ‘potter’s fields’ of migration 62
6 Identifying and accounting for the dead 63
7 A right to identity 66
8 Conclusion 69

PART II
Deliberating: the efforts of those who work out the system

4 The constitutional status of irregular migrants: testing the boundaries of human rights protection in Spain and the United States

CRISTINA M RODRÍGUEZ AND RUTH RUBIO-MARÍN

1 The human rights-sovereignty compromise 74
2 The general framework governing foreigners as fundamental rights holders 77
3 Legislative-judicial dialogue on irregular migrants as fundamental rights holders 84
4 Conclusion 98

5 A new articulation of human rights, or why the European Court of Human Rights should think beyond Westphalian sovereignty

GALINA CORNELISSE

1 Immigration detention and the ECHR 100
2 The territorial blind spots of modern constitutionalism 106
3 Destabilising territorial sovereignty through human rights 112
4 Conclusion 118
PART III
Protesting: the outrage of the witness 121

6 The French Calaisis: transit zone or dead-end? 123
MARIE-BENÉDICTE DEMBOUR AND MARIE MARTIN
1 From Sangatte to the jungles 126
2 Are the Calaisis migrants refugees? 128
3 The response of the French authorities 135
4 Which role for human rights? 142

7 ‘Not our problem’: why the detention of irregular migrants is not considered a human rights issue in Malta 146
DANIELA DEBONO
1 Treatment of immigrants attracts international criticism of Malta 147
2 The position taken by the Maltese Government 151
3 The European Union and shifting of responsibility for the human rights of outsiders 153
4 The Maltese family: a social mechanism of containment and care, hierarchy-setting and exclusion 157
5 Concluding remarks 162

PART IV
Keeping one’s distance: the puzzlement of the sceptic 163

8 Human rights and immigration detention in the United Kingdom 165
MARY BOSWORTH
1 The human rights framework 167
2 Immigration detention: the legal and statistical context 168
3 The criminalization of migrants 170
4 The under-criminalization of migration 173
5 Conclusion: the right to have rights 181

9 The legalization of human rights and the protection of torture survivors: asylum, evidence and disbelief 184
TOBIAS KELLY
1 Human rights: legal and ethical claims 186
2 The case 188
viii Contents

3 Assessing evidence 193
4 Conclusion 198

10 Human rights within one state: dilemmas of personhood in liberal constitutional thought 201

LINDA BOSNIJK

1 Aligned or opposing concepts? 202
2 Constructed or given? 204
3 Personhood, thin and thick 207
4 Evasion of personhood 209
5 Territoriality/personhood in space 211
6 People/personhood in community 213
7 Personhood in war and emergency 216
8 Conclusion 217

11 Afterword: the struggle for sans-papiers human rights 222

UPENDRA BAXI

1 Prefatory 222
2 Messages of hope 223
3 The sites of despair 225
4 The marks of hospitality 229

Index 233