Cluster Munitions and International Law
Disarmament with a human face?

Alexander Breitegger
Contents

Table of cases ix
Acknowledgements xi
List of abbreviations xii

1 Introduction 1
   1.1 The necessity for disarmament with a human face in relation to cluster munitions 1
   1.2 On methodology and limitations of the topic 7
   1.3 Overview of chapters 8

2 Factual evidence in relation to cluster munitions 13
   2.1 What are cluster munitions? Properties and military purpose 13
   2.2 A history of cluster munition use, production and proliferation 18
   2.3 Humanitarian concerns 26

3 Existing international humanitarian law relevant to cluster munitions 40
   3.1 Military necessity v. humanity 40
   3.2 Distinction 42
   3.3 Proportionality 47
   3.4 Precautionary obligations imposed on the attacker 53
   3.5 The 2003 Protocol V on explosive remnants of war 58

4 Jurisprudence on IHL in relation to cluster munition use 67
   4.1 The Eritrea–Ethiopia Claims Commission partial award of 28 April 2004 67
   4.2 The Martić case before the ICTY 69
   4.3 The ICTY OTP’s treatment of NATO cluster munition use 80
viii  Contents

5  The use of cluster munitions as a human rights problem 90
   5.1  The relationship between IHL and human rights law 90
   5.2  The application of the right to life to cluster munition use during armed conflict 92
   5.3  The application of the right not to be subjected to cruel or inhuman treatment to cluster munition use during armed conflict 96
   5.4  The application of the right to life to victims of unexploded sub-munitions 98
   5.5  The application of social, economic and children's rights to contamination with unexploded sub-munitions 101
   5.6  The Ottawa Convention on anti-personnel mines 103
   5.7  The Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities 108

6  Issues related to cluster munition use before human rights mechanisms 124
   6.1  The Behrami case before the European Court for Human Rights 124
   6.2  The UN special procedures on the use of cluster munitions in Lebanon and Israel 127

7  The Oslo process on cluster munitions and its interaction with the CCW 134
   7.1  The Third Review Conference of the CCW 134
   7.2  The Oslo Conference on cluster munitions 139
   7.3  The Lima Conference on cluster munitions 143
   7.4  The Vienna Conference on cluster munitions 153
   7.5  The Wellington Conference on cluster munitions: towards the Wellington Declaration 160

8  The Convention on Cluster Munitions 178
   8.1  Interoperability 178
   8.2  The definition of prohibited cluster munitions 186
   8.3  Stockpile destruction 194
   8.4  Clearance and destruction of cluster munition remnants and risk reduction education 196
   8.5  Victim assistance 198
   8.6  The issue of financing cluster munition producers 203

9  Conclusions 214

Annexes 229

Select bibliography 248
Index 260