Understanding crime prevention
Social control, risk and late modernity

Gordon Hughes
Contents

Series editor’s foreword ix
Acknowledgements xi

Introduction 1
Beyond the paradigm of technicist evaluation 1
Towards a sociology of crime prevention 4
The late modern risk society thesis, communitarianism and crime control 6
Further reading 11

1 Mapping the terrain of crime prevention 12
Crime prevention: a recent growth industry 12
Meanings of crime prevention 13
The state, the politics of law and order and crime prevention 14
Crime prevention: a new paradigm of crime control? 15
Unpacking the concept of crime prevention 17
Classifying types of crime prevention 18
Contexts and discourses of crime prevention 23
Summary 24
Further reading 24

2 Classicism and the deterrent presences of the modern state 25
Introduction 25
The first school of criminology? 26
Excursus on pre-modern crime control 27
The classical theory of crime prevention 28
A new governance of crime 31
Deterrent presences of the nineteenth-century state 32
Critical appraisal of classicist crime prevention 35
Summary 36
Further reading 36
3 Positivism and the cure of 'criminal man'

Introduction
The positivist paradigm in criminology
The Lombrosian project
Positivist crime prevention and the modernist project
Psychological and sociological positivisms in the twentieth century
Rehabilitation as 'prevention'
Community development as 'prevention': the Chicagoan project
The post-war triumph of social democratic positivism in the UK
The demise and 're-birth' of the rehabilitative ideal
The new genetics of criminality
Developmental crime prevention
Critical appraisal of the positivist crime prevention discourse
Summary
Further reading

4 Situational crime prevention: the pragmatics of crime control

Introduction
A Home Office 'administrative criminology'? Clarke's definition of situational crime prevention
Lessons from the USA
Rational choice theory
'Some things work': the pragmatics of crime prevention
Critical appraisal
Explaining the hegemony of the situational crime prevention discourse
Summary
Further reading

5 Multi-agency partnerships: managing corporate crime prevention

Introduction
What is multi-agency crime prevention?
Deciphering the trends in multi-agency crime prevention in the UK
The managerialization of crime prevention
The coming of the Morgan Report and the 'partnership approach'
The 'mixed economy' approach of central government
'Don't believe the hype'? The academic critique of multi-agency crime prevention
Sceptical pluralism
The radical totalitarian critique
Life beyond the central state? Local community safety strategies
Contents

Summary 102
Further reading 103

6 Communitarianism: bringing ‘the social’ back into crime prevention? 104
Introduction 104
The seductions of community 105
Basic tenets of communitarianism 106
Conservative moral communitarianism 108
   Etzioni on morality, crime and community 108
   Moral communitarian appeals in the UK 110
New Labour, communitarianism and ‘zero tolerance’ 112
Critiques of moral authoritarian communitarianism 113
Radical left communitarian re-imaginings of the community-crime nexus 115
Social welfare, justice and the common good 115
The left realist programme 118
A radical twist on responsibility? 121
Restorative justice and ‘reintegrative shaming’: excavating the future from the past? 121
Critical appraisal of the radical left politics of community-based crime prevention 126
Summary 128
Further reading 129

7 The futures of crime control in late modernity 130
Introduction 130
Late modernity, risk society and social control 131
Connecting developments in crime prevention to late modernity 135
   Bottoms and Wiles on comparative, globalizing trends 136
Model 1: ‘fortress cities’, privatism and social exclusion 138
   Davis on Los Angeles: the fortress city 138
   Feeley and Simon on the new penology 141
Shearing and Stenning on corporate, non-carceral control 141
   A rampant global privatism? 142
Model 2: ‘high trust’ societies and authoritarian communitarianism 144
   Japan: culture as a restraining medium against crime? 144
Cohesive communities, coercive states 145
Model 3: towards civic and inclusive ‘safe’ cities? 146
   Renaissance of the local? 147
Regenerating the public sphere in debates on crime and safety 149