Realist Criminology: Crime Control and Policing in the 1990s

Edited by
John Lowman
Brian D. MacLean

University of Toronto Press
Toronto Buffalo London
Contents

Foreword: The Criminology That Came in Out of the Cold
Paul Rock / ix

Preface / xiii

1 Introduction: Left Realism, Crime Control, and Policing in the 1990s
John Lowman and Brian D. MacLean / 3

Part One: The Case for Left Realism

2 Realist Research as a Basis for Local Criminal Justice Policy
Jock Young / 33

3 Developing a Realist Approach to Penal Reform
Roger Matthews / 73

4 Retreatism, Minimalism, Realism: Three Styles of Reasoning
on Crime and Drugs in the United States
Elliott Currie / 88

Part Two: A Critical Assessment of Left Realism

5 Canadian Realist Criminology in the 1990s:
Some Reflections on the Quest for Social Justice
Paul Havemann / 101

6 Crime and Justice in Socialist Cuba: What Can Left Realists Learn?
Raymond J. Michalowski / 115
viii Contents

7 Beyond Realist Criminology
Robert Menzies  / 139

8 The ‘Left Regulation’ of Prostitution:
Reconciling Individual Rights and Collective Interests
John Lowman / 157

9 Why Company Law Is Important to Left Realists
Rob McQueen / 177

Part Three: Left Realism and Feminism

10 Women, Crime, Feminism, and Realism
Pat Carlen / 203

11 Feminism and Realism in the Canadian Context
Dawn H. Currie / 221

12 Counting What Counts: The Study of Women’s Fear of Crime
Seema Ahluwalia / 246

13 Confronting Woman Abuse in Canada: A Left-Realist Approach
Walter S. DeKeseredy / 264

Part Four: Left Realism and Victimology

14 Researching Victims of Crime: Critical Victimology
Sandra Walklate / 285

15 The Local Crime Survey: Pitfalls and Possibilities
Ken Pease / 303

16 The Contribution of ‘Left Realism’ to the Study of Commercial Crime
Frank Pearce / 313

17 A Program of Local Crime Survey Research for Canada
Brian D. MacLean / 336

Notes on Contributors / 367