PART I The Regime of Underwater Cultural Heritage Before the 2001 UNESCO Convention 1

1. A Contradictory and Counterproductive Regime 3
   Tullio Scovazzi
   1. An unexpected obstacle. 3
   2. The UNCLOS regime:
      A) two general obligations; 4
      B) cigarette smugglers, clandestine immigrants and infectious patients; 5
      C) the benefit of mankind as a whole; 6
      D) a legal vacuum; 7
      E) an invitation to looting; 8
      F) prospects for a better regime. 9
   3. The CPUCH as a defensive tool:
      A) the rejection of the law of salvage and finds; 10
      B) the exclusion of a “first come, first served” approach for the heritage found on the continental shelf; 11
      C) the strengthening of regional cooperation. 14
   4. Concluding remarks. 15

2. The Application of “Salvage Law and Other Rules of Admiralty” to the Underwater Cultural Heritage: Some Relevant Cases 19
   Tullio Scovazzi
   1. A rather unconvincing statement (to say the least). 19
   2. The Melqart of Sciacca. 20
   3. The Dutch East India Company vessels:
      A) the agreement between Australia and the Netherlands; 21
      B) the salvaging of the Geldermalsen. 23
   4. The British warships:
      A) “women and children first” (the Birkenhead); 28
      B) the search for the Erebus and the Terror; 30
   5. The United States warships:
      A) the first ironclad ship (the Monitor); 32
      B) the bell of the Alabama; 34
Contents

6. The Saga of the Spanish Galleons:
   A) the Nuestra Señora de Atocha; 38
   B) the apotheosis of salvors (the admiral ship of the 1715 Plate Fleet); 38
   C) being embedded in the sand (the Santa Rosalea and others); 42
   D) the revenge of Spain (the Juno and the La Galgá). 51

7. The saga of the Titanic:
   A) the loss and the discovery; 60
   B) the R.M.S. Titanic Memorial Act of 1986; 63
   C) the granting of salver rights; 65
   D) the salver against the competing salver; 66
   E) the salver against the photographer; 67
   F) the salver against the tour operator; 67
   G) the salver against the United States; 70
   H) the Titanic artefacts will be sold; 71
   I) Mr. Ballard’s view. 73

8. The Skerki Bank deep sea project. 75

9. Conclusion (why it may be better if Columbus’ wrecks are not found). 77

PART II The 2001 UNESCO Convention 81

3. Negotiating the Convention on Underwater Cultural Heritage:
   Myths and Reality 83
   Ariel W. Gonzalez
   1. First myth: on the nature of the Convention. 83
   2. Second myth: on the object of the protection. 85
   3. Third myth: on the role of the Convention. 86
   4. Back to reality? 87

4. The Negotiating History of the Provisions of the Convention on the Protection of the Underwater Cultural Heritage 89
   Roberta Garabello
   1. Introduction. Overview of the negotiation process. 89
   2. Preliminary questions:
      2.1 Need for an international instrument and its form; 93
      2.2. Role of UNESCO. 95
   3. Negotiating history of the individual articles. 95

5. The Crucial Compromise on Salvage Law and the Law of Finds
   Guido Carducci
   1. The regime adopted and its importance. 193
   2. The genesis of the regime: (private) comparative law difficulties and beyond. 195
   3. Ownership, the Convention and some doubts on “spontaneous”
      salvage applied ex se on UCH. 198
4. The condition of "peril": should salvage law apply to UCH?
5. The condition of abandonment: should law of finds apply on UCH and on warships?
