CONTENTS

List of Abbreviations ................................................................. xi
List of Cases ............................................................................. xiii
List of Tables ............................................................................. xv
Acknowledgements ................................................................. xvii
Introduction .............................................................................. 1

PART ONE

E Volving Practice in European Union Enlargement

Chapter One Eligible candidates and procedural steps to accession ........................................................................ 21
  1. An introduction to understanding European Union enlargement ........................................................................ 21
  1.1 An open Community ...................................................................... 21
  1.2 Evolution in pre-accession practices ........................................ 27
    1.2.1 'Pre-accession' and the Copenhagen criteria .............................................................. 32
  2. Eligibility to apply for membership, admissibility criteria and procedural steps ........................................ 36
    2.1 Article 49 TEU establishes eligibility conditions and procedural steps ........................................ 37
      2.1.1 Referendums: a wild card in accession treaty procedure ................................................. 38
      2.1.2 Only 'European' States may apply: expanding geographical limits of the Union ............ 40
  2.2 Innovations of the Amsterdam Treaty .......................................... 43
  2.3 Implications of the Treaty of Lisbon ............................................ 44
  3. Primary law limits on accession treaties and transitional arrangements ......................................................... 48
    3.1 Article 49 TEU: 'adjustments' ...................................................... 48
3.2 Permanent derogations from the acquis are extremely rare ................................................................. 50
3.3 Accession treaties cannot be used for major treaty revision ............................................................... 53

Chapter Two The Copenhagen criteria: efforts required before and after accession ........................................ 57
1. The Copenhagen criteria ......................................................................................................................... 57
   1.1 The precedents for the Copenhagen criteria were already in place .................................................. 58
   1.2 Absorption capacity: increasing importance of the fourth Copenhagen criteria ................................ 60
2. The political criteria and good neighbourly relations ...... 69
   2.1 Increasingly precise political preconditions ............ 75
   2.2 Potential candidates: the specificity of the Stabilisation and Association Process ......................... 77
   2.3 Good neighbourly relations and good neighbourliness ................................................................. 79
3. The economic, legal and administrative capacity criteria ............................................................................ 84
   3.1 ...to be assessed in a 'forward looking and dynamic way' ............................................................. 84
   3.2 The Copenhagen legal criteria .......................................................... 87
   3.3 The Madrid criterion: administrative and judicial capacity ............................................................ 88

Chapter Three Instruments of the pre-accession strategy: from Agenda 2000 to date ........................................ 95
1. Growing significance of bilateral contractual relations in pre-accession instruments ................................ 95
   1.1 Previously, contractual relations were not a pre-requisite for accession negotiations ................. 96
   1.2 Opening accession negotiations: a real commitment to enlarge? .................................................... 103
   1.3 The Association Agreement becomes a contractual yardstick of pre-accession progress ................ 108
2. European/Accession Partnerships: autonomous instruments in so many ways .................................... 113
   2.1 Legal basis and relationship with the association agreement ....................................................... 114
CONTENTS

2.2 The pre-accession tools for Turkey ........................................ 122
2.3 The Western Balkans: the Council’s conditionality checklist of April 1997 ............................................................. 126

3. Financial and operational support and inclusion .................. 129
  3.1 Beginning with Phare… .................................................. 129
  3.2 The Instrument for Pre-accession Assistance ................. 132
  3.3 Incorporating the candidates at an operational level in EU programmes and agencies ........................................... 137

Chapter Four Accession Treaties: transitional arrangements and other means to ease the impact of enlargement .......... 141
  1. Flexibility mechanisms in accession treaties and their negotiation ............................................................. 141
     1.1 Negotiating transitional arrangements .......................... 143
     1.2 The structure of accession treaties .............................. 147
     1.3 Information and consultation provisions ..................... 151
  2. Scope and content of transitional arrangements ................ 152
     2.1 General transition periods and approximation with the acquis .................................................. 152
     2.2 Temporary or exceptional transitional arrangements ............................................................. 156
     2.3 The legal nature of transitional arrangements ............. 158
        2.3.1 The fifth and sixth Accession Treaties ............... 159
        2.3.2 Derogations, adjustments and adaptations to the acquis after signature of an accession treaty ............................................................. 161
        2.3.3 The right to effective judicial remedy prior to entry into force of an accession treaty ........ 168
  3. Emergency economic safeguard measures ......................... 171
     3.1 …to protect a given area or sector of the economy ............................................................. 171
     3.2 The broad discretion of the European Commission ............................................................. 174

Chapter Five New flexibility mechanisms in the fifth and sixth Accession Treaties ........................................... 177
  1. Differentiated integration: EMU, Schengen, Cyprus and the CAP ............................................................. 177
     1.1 Economic and Monetary Union ................................... 177
     1.2 Schengen ............................................................... 180
CONTENTS

1.3 The special case of the Cyprus 'green line' .................................. 182
1.4 The Common Agricultural Policy .................................................. 186
2. New forms of flexibility mechanism ................................................. 187
  2.1 Internal Market safeguard measures ............................................. 192
  2.1.1 Motivation, content and use ................................................... 192
  2.1.2 Procedure .............................................................................. 197
  2.1.3 A comparison with the Article 258 TFEU infringement procedure .......... 199
  2.2 The Justice and Home Affairs safeguard clause ............................... 202
3. Romania and Bulgaria: special tools to deal with their 'manifest unpreparedness' .................................................................................. 204
  3.1 The Co-operation and Verification Mechanism .................................. 204
  3.2 The postponement clause .................................................................. 209

PART TWO
CASE STUDIES ON EU ENVIRONMENT AND AGRI-FOOD LAW

Chapter Six EU environment law .......................................................... 215
  1. The starting point for approximating to the EU environment acquis .......................................................... 216
  1.1 Approximation: appropriateness and environmental benefits? ................................. 219
  1.1.1 Enlargement: a considerable stick in EU green foreign policy ................................. 219
  1.1.2 The environment acquis: the benefits of a 'fait accompli' ................................... 221
  1.1.3 Limits to the environment acquis .............................................................................. 229
  1.2 The mechanics of the pre-accession strategy for the environment acquis ................... 234
  1.2.1 Approximation, capacity building and regional co-operation ............................ 237
  1.2.2 The singular challenge of investment ...................................................................... 247
  1.2.3 Nuclear safety: approximation in the absence of acquis ........................................ 251
  2. The environment acquis and the fifth and sixth enlargements: post-accession conditionality and transitional arrangements .......................................................... 259
  2.1 Post-accession incentives ................................................................................. 259
CONTENTS

2.1.1 EU capacity building actions and incentives .................................................. 259
2.1.2 The Internal Market safeguard clause and the environment acquis .................................................. 261
2.1.3 Post-accession conditionality in the nuclear sector .................................................. 265

2.2 Transitional arrangements in the 2003 and 2005 Accession Treaties .................................................. 271
2.2.1 Negotiating transitional arrangements .................................................. 271
2.2.2 Transitional arrangements in the environment acquis .................................................. 274
2.2.3 Adaptations to the environment acquis and new transitional derogations .................................................. 295

3. Performance of the new Member States in EU environment acquis after accession .................................................. 296
3.1 The feasibility of the pre-accession commitments .................................................. 300
3.2 Do weaknesses in the pre-accession strategy undermine the application and continued evolution of the environment acquis in an enlarging Union? .................................................. 312
3.2.1 Transitional arrangements in the environment acquis: another governance challenge in an enlarging Union .................................................. 313
3.2.2 Continued evolution of the environment acquis in an enlarging Union .................................................. 321

Chapter Seven EU agri-food law .................................................. 333
1. The starting point for approximating to the EU agri-food acquis .................................................. 333
1.1 Approximation during the reform of EU agri-food law .................................................. 336
1.1.1 The institutional and policy overhaul after the fourth enlargement .................................................. 342
1.1.2 The legal basis for EU agri-food law .................................................. 344
1.1.3 Institutional reform and the elevated status of food safety .................................................. 346
1.2 The mechanics of the pre-accession strategy for the agri-food acquis .................................................. 350
1.2.1 The shift from ‘equivalence’ to full compliance as a Member State .................................................. 355
1.2.2 The aim: food hygiene and safety is paramount ........................................... 356
1.2.3 Comparative advantage of EFTA members under the EEA Agreement .................. 358
2. The agri-food acquis and the fifth and sixth enlargements: post-accession conditionality and transitional arrangements .................................................. 362
  2.1 Post-accession incentives ................................................................. 363
    2.1.1 The need for credible commitments ........................................ 364
    2.1.2 EU capacity building actions pre-accession .......................... 364
    2.1.3 Post-accession capacity building, monitoring and evaluation ........................................ 365
  2.2 Transitional arrangements contained in the 2003 and 2005 Accession Treaties .................. 367
    2.2.1 A summary of transitional arrangements in the agri-food acquis ......................... 369
    2.2.2 Adaptations to the agri-food acquis: Article 57 Act of Accession ..................... 378
    2.2.3 New transitional derogations .................................................... 378
3. Performance of the new Member States in EU agri-food acquis after accession .................. 383
  3.1 Informal transitional arrangements: an undergrowth of non-compliance? ..................... 383
  3.2 Are safeguard and crisis measures under Regulation 178/2002 sufficient? .................... 401
Conclusions ......................................................................................... 411
Annex I Current agri-food legislation in force ........................................ 427
Bibliography ...................................................................................... 435
Index ................................................................................................. 441