Contents

Preface xiii
Acknowledgements xv
Acronyms and abbreviations xvii

1. Introduction 1
   Alexei Arbatov, Vladimir Baranovsky, Pierre Hassner, Robert Legvold, John Roper and Adam Daniel Rotfeld
   I. The enduring connection 1
   II. A new agenda 3
   III. The domestic framework 5
   IV. Military security 7
   V. Russia’s post-Soviet identity 8
   VI. Russia’s European vicinity 10
   VII. Searching for a role in Europe 12

Part I. The security context
Map: The territory of Russia by 1600 and 1700 16
Map: The Russian Empire by 1800 and 1900 18

2. The historical background of Russian security concepts and requirements 21
   Lothar Rühl
   I. Introduction 21
   II. Lessons of Russian history 24
   III. Enduring security: patterns of thought 29
   IV. Extended security space 31
   V. The problem of allies 36
   VI. Conclusions 40

3. The ‘Russian Question’ 42
   Robert Legvold
   I. Introduction 42
   II. Russia and the problem of European security 43
   III. The domestic setting: praetorianism and other deep structural factors 48
   IV. The international setting: system, order and choice 54
   V. Russia’s options 60
   VI. Europe’s options 64
Part II. Domestic political developments: the security implications

Map: the 89 ‘subjects’ of the Russian Federation  72
Background chronology  75

4. The vicissitudes of Russian politics  77
Alexei Arbatov

I. Introduction  77
II. Russian reforms: shock without therapy  78
III. The regime in crisis  81
IV. Drifting towards authoritarianism  84
V. Conclusions: second wind for reform  87

5. Towards a post-imperial identity  90
Marie Mendras

I. Introduction  90
II. The end of grand design  91
III. Searching for a national identity  96
IV. The limits of the imagined community  98
V. Concluding remarks  102

6. Russia’s emerging statehood in the national security context  104
Aleksei M. Salmin

I. Introduction  104
II. The emerging political system  105
III. Regional stability in the Russian Federation  112
IV. Prospects for stabilization and zones of risk  120
V. General considerations  126
VI. Conclusions  128

Part III. Debates on Russia’s national interests

Background chronology  133

7. Russian foreign policy thinking in transition  135
Alexei Arbatov

I. Introduction  135
II. Principal groups in the foreign policy elite  135
III. Infantile disorders of foreign policy, 1992–93  139
IV. Realignment of domestic foreign policy groups  142
V. Russian foreign affairs in the ‘near abroad’  144
VI. The ‘far abroad’ and Russian global interests  153
VII. Conclusions  158
viii RUSSIA AND EUROPE

Part VI. The Slav triangle: challenges and opportunities

Map: Russia, Belarus and Ukraine 268
Background chronology: Russia’s relations with Belarus and Ukraine 269
Key facts 270

12. The East Slav triangle 271

Vasily Kremen

I. Introduction 271
II. The viability of the new Slav states 271
III. Russia in the foreign policies of Belarus and Ukraine 276
IV. Problems of security and strategic perspectives 282
V. Conclusions 288

13. Russia and the Slav vicinity 289

Sergei Karaganov

I. Introduction 289
II. Ukraine 289
III. Belarus 295
IV. Conclusions: Russia’s choices 297

Part VII. The Baltic dilemma and relations with Nordic Europe

Map: Russia, Scandinavia and the Baltic countries 302
Key facts 303

14. Russian policy in Northern Europe 305

Lena Jonson

I. Introduction 305
II. National security strategies and the Russian debate 307
III. New problems in the north-west: a more exposed border? 310
IV. The international role of Russia 318
V. The role of military defence 320
VI. Conclusions: an altered strategy in Northern Europe? 321

15. In search of a new strategy in the Baltic/Nordic area 325

Alexander A. Sergounin

I. Introduction 325
II. The region through the prism of Russian national interest 325
III. Military issues 330
IV. National minorities 338
V. Territorial issues 342
VI. Conclusions 348
Part X. Challenges from the south

Map: Russia and the Transcaucasus in geopolitical context 426
Summary of the principal armed conflicts in the Caucasus 427
Key facts 428

20. Russia in the Caucasus: interests, threats and policy options 429
Maxim Shashenkov

I. The Caucasian security complex 429
II. Russia in the Caucasus: interests and threats 436
III. ‘What is to be done?’: Russian policy options 441
IV. Conclusions 451

Part XI. Economic factors: implications for relations with Europe

Background chronology 455
Key facts 457

21. Russia and the political economy of the transformation period 459
Hans-Joachim Spanger

I. Introduction 459
II. The Russian economy: coping with the inevitable 461
III. Reorganizing regional economic cooperation: coping with the undesirable 467
IV. Finding an appropriate place in the world: coping with great expectations 470
V. Conclusions: the impact on Russia’s relations with Europe 473

22. Economic transformation in Russia and political partnership with Europe
Yuriy Borko

I. Introduction 476
II. Economic reform in Russia and its relations with the West 476
III. Russia and the EU 481
IV. Russia and the former socialist countries 490
V. The European dimensions of CIS integration 492
VI. Conclusions 496
Part XII. The emerging international order in Europe: what place for Russia?

- Russia's relations with the principal multilateral institutions in Europe 501
- Russia in the European institutional architecture 502

23. Redefining Russia's role in Europe

John Roper and Peter van Ham

- I. Introduction 503
- II. From a 'common European home' to realpolitik 503
- III. Policies towards the West: main political forces and the domestic balance of power 507
- IV. Western influence over Russia's foreign and security policy 513
- V. Conclusions 518

24. Russia and European institutions

Andrei Zagorski

- I. Introduction 519
- II. Major factors 520
- III. Institutionalizing relations with European structures 524
- IV. Conclusions 539

Part XIII. Conclusion

25. Assessing Russia's interaction with Europe

Vladimir Baranovsky

About the authors 555
Index 560