Theory & Reality in the International Protection of Human Rights

J. Shand Watson

Transnational Publishers, Inc.
Ardsley, New York
CONTENTS

Acknowledgments ................................................................. vii

Preface ................................................................. ix

Chapter I.  The Gap Between Theory and Reality .................. 1

Chapter II.  State Practice and Consent in the Choice of Legal Theory .......................................................... 17

Chapter III.  Coercion, and the Motivation to Comply with Human Rights Norms ............................................ 49

Chapter IV.  Custom as the True Practice of States ............ 79

Chapter V.  General Assembly Resolutions as a Source of Human Rights .......................................................... 107

Chapter VI.  Treaties, Obligation, and Nonenforcement .......... 139

Chapter VII.  Subsidiary Sources .......................................... 169

Chapter VIII.  Domestic Jurisdiction versus International Jurisdiction .......................................................... 203

Chapter IX.  Humanitarian Intervention and Nonenforcement .......................................................... 239

Chapter X.  The Role of Natural Law and Natural Rights ....... 273

Chapter XI.  The Efficacy of Domestic Secondary Norms .......... 301

Index ........................................................................... 327