The EEC Crisis of 1963

Kennedy, Macmillan, de Gaulle and Adenauer in Conflict

Oliver Bange

Preface by Peter Catterall

in association with
INSTITUTE OF CONTEMPORARY BRITISH HISTORY  ICBH
Contents

List of Cartoons ix
Preface xi
General Editor's Preface xiii

Introduction 1

PART I GRAND DESIGNS AND THE RATIONALE BEHIND THE FIRST BRITISH EEC NEGOTIATIONS

1 Macmillan’s Grand Design (1959–60) as a Starting Point for the Application 10
1.1 British membership in the European Communities: good reasons and an early master plan 10
1.2 American pressures: Washington’s political objectives and the Dillon talks of 1959 11
1.3 Decisive moments: the meeting between Eisenhower and Macmillan at Camp David, March 1960, and the formation of the Lee Committee, April 1960 13
1.4 The Prime Minister’s Grand Design papers 16

2 The Main Obstacle: de Gaulle 20
2.1 British approaches and French ambiguities 20
2.2 De Gaulle’s idea of Europe 22
2.3 La note Peyrefitte: a temporary answer to open contradictions 25
2.4 An overall tactic, a temporary aid, an eventuality or a sinister ploy? An attempt to estimate the influence of Peyrefitte’s ideas 27
PART II  THE STORY OF ADENAUER’S AND DE GAULLE’S COMPROMISE: A FRESH LOOK AT THE CRITICAL EVENTS OF JANUARY 1963

7  Nassau: A New Look at its Meaning and its Promotion
   7.1 American approaches to the French: a genuine offer? 73
   7.2 American illusions over the French reception 75
   7.3 Another important scenario: the German reception of the MLF offer 78
   7.4 The George Ball story 80

8  Heath and the Atlanticists – Heath’s ‘Big Push’ 86
   8.1 ‘Concerted Action’ – the British plan and the tactics of personal pressure 86
   8.2 Chequers: a crucial meeting on the way to a final deal in Brussels 93

9  Before the Veto 102
   9.1 Adenauer before the veto 102
   9.2 Washington before the veto 104

10 De Gaulle’s Infamous Press Conference 108
   10.1 Preparations in Brussels 108
   10.2 The bombshell: de Gaulle’s press conference 109
   10.3 Reactions to the press conference 112

11 The Ministerial Meeting – A First Dramatic Encounter 117
   11.1 The clash at Brussels 117
   11.2 Public reactions to the crisis at Brussels 125
   11.3 Adenauer’s perception of the situation 126

12 Anglo-American Co-ordination towards a Breakdown in Brussels 129
   12.1 The situation in Washington – setting the mould for crisis and confrontation 130
   12.2 A change of objectives: towards a useful breakdown in Brussels 135
Contents

13 Adenauer's and de Gaulle's Plan for a Compromise
   13.1 International pressure on Adenauer 151
   13.2 Adenauer on the eve of the Conference: will he confront de Gaulle? 155
   13.3 The Élysée Conference and an understanding between two old men 157

14 Hysteria in the Western Camp: 22–28 January 1963
   14.1 Adenauer and the Auswärtiges Amt: differences in outlook and judgement 165
   14.2 First rumours of a compromise at the Élysée conference 169
   14.3 British reactions: from complete lack of alternatives to the attempt to alter the Élysée deal 170
   14.4 Contradictory stands in Brussels: the Commission and the Belgians 175
   14.5 American reactions 177
   14.6 Hysteria and rumours 188
   14.7 The French defensive 192
   14.8 Reactions in the Federal Republic 195

15 The Breakdown in Brussels – Purely the Fault of the French?
   15.1 Interpretation of the events 207
   15.2 A fresh look at the Brussels breakdown 219
   15.3 Immediate reactions 231

Conclusion

Notes and References

Bibliography

Index