The Political Culture of the Russian ‘Democrats’

ALEXANDER LUKIN

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS
CONTENTS

List of Abbreviations

1. Introduction 1
   1.1. General framework 1
   1.2. Sources and methodology 8
       The sources 9
       The general methods of analysis of the sources 9
       Descriptive literature as a source 12
       Methods of conducting and analysing interviews 13
       Written/recorded articles and the discourse of group members 18
       The results of quantitative research 20
       Participants' memoirs 21
       Official documents of 'democratic' groups and parties 21

2. 'Democratic' Groups in Soviet Russia: An Assessment of the Literature 22
   2.1. Russian and Soviet political culture: problems of analysis 22
       Russian political culture and Soviet reality 22
       Soviet political culture: problems of methodology 28
       The occidocentrism of research on Soviet and Russian political culture 33
   2.2. Studies of the Russian 'democrats' 35
       Reference literature 35
       Descriptive literature 36
       Politically motivated literature 40
       Russian 'democrats' and general theories 41
       Studies of the beliefs of Russian 'democrats' 47
   2.3. Conclusions 64

3. The Emergence and Development of 'Democratic' Groups and Embryonic Political Parties 66
   3.1. Independent groups before perestroika 66
   3.2. Clubs and groups of activists 68
       Discussion clubs 68
       Action groups 70
       Human rights groups 71
   3.3. Unions and associations 73
       Associations of clubs and groups 74
Contents

The Democratic Union 75
Memorial 77
3.4. Popular fronts 79
3.5. Election unions and parties 81
   Voters' clubs and unions 81
   The Democratic Russia Movement 85
   'Democratic' parties 86
3.6. Patterns of joining 'democratic' groups and theories of recruitment 95
3.7. Social composition and recruitment 103
3.8. Conclusions 111

4. From Marxism to Anti-Communism: the Sources and Evolution of the Political Beliefs of Russian 'Democrats' 113
4.1. Official ideology 113
4.2. Personal life experience as a source of 'democratic' beliefs 122
4.3. Family education and family reminiscences 133
4.4. Officially published literature in the pre-perestroyka period 138
4.5. Foreign travel 145
4.6. Forbidden materials 147
4.7. Perestroyka and the sweeping conversion to 'democratic' values 152
4.8. Conclusions 164

5. Hell on Earth: Attitudes toward the Existing Soviet State and Social Structure 167
5.1. From criticism of 'certain shortcomings' to full repudiation 167
5.2. Shortcomings caused by 'deviation from Marxism' 167
5.3. The notion of the administrative command system 168
5.4. The new class 169
5.5. The Soviet system as a political regime 171
5.6. The Soviet system as a social system 172
5.7. The Soviet system as a historical regression 176
5.8. The Soviet system as a mode of thinking 182
5.9. Methods of struggle 185
5.10. Conclusions 189

6. The Ideal Society: Interpretations of Democracy 192
6.1. 'Democracy' and 'communism' in the late Soviet period 192
6.2. The democracy of 'civilized' society and socialist democracy 193
6.3. Democracy as an aim and as a means 195
6.4. Democracy as freedom from state control 196
6.5. Democracy as justice 204
6.6. Democracy as prosperity 211
6.7. Democracy as a 'road to perfection' 212
6.8. The internationalism of Russian 'democrats' 217
Contents

6.9. Methods of struggle for 'democracy' 221
6.10. Conclusions 224

7. The Bi-polar World: Soviet Totalitarianism and Western Civilization 228
7.1. The world of 'democracy' and the world of 'totalitarianism' 228
7.2. 'Democratic' geography 229
7.3. The advance of history 235
7.4. The road to civilization 237
7.5. The unity of the world and global values 238
7.6. The 'democratic' foreign policy 240
7.7. Conclusions 244

8. The Political Culture of Russian 'Democrats': the New and the Old 248
8.1. Defining Soviet society: why 'totalitarianism'? 249
8.2. The beliefs of Russian 'democrats' and contemporary theories of democracy 257
8.3. Continuity, change, and Russian politics 267
8.4. The Russian 'democratic' political subculture and the dominant political culture of the Soviet Union 279

9. Conclusions: The Political Culture of Russian 'Democrats' and Russian Politics 288

Bibliography 301
List of Interviews 314
Index 319