INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS—STILL AN AMERICAN SOCIAL SCIENCE?

Toward Diversity in International Thought edited by

ROBERT M. A. CRAWFORD
and
DARRYL S. L. JARVIS

State University of New York Press
CONTENTS

Tables and Figures ix

Preface xi

Introduction International Relations as an Academic Discipline: If It’s Good for America, Is It Good for the World? 1
Robert M. A. Crawford

PART I Hegemony and Diversity in International Thought

Chapter 1 An American Social Science: International Relations 27
Stanley Hoffmann

Chapter 2 What Does it Mean to be an American Social Science? A Pragmatist Case for Diversity in International Relations 53
Molly Cochran

Chapter 3 Along the Road of International Theory in the Next Millennium: Four Travelogues 73
Kalevi J. Holsti

Chapter 4 Identity Politics, Postmodern Feminisms and International Theory: Questioning the “New” Diversity in International Relations 101
D. S. L. Jarvis

Chapter 5 Can There be National Perspectives on Inter(National) Relations? 131
Tony Porter

PART II National and TransNational Identities in InterNational Theory

Chapter 6 Hegemony and Autonomy in International Relations: The Continental Experience 151
A. J. R. Groom and Peter Mandaville
Chapter 7  Tales that Textbooks Tell: Ethnocentricity and Diversity in American Introductions to International Relations
Kim Richard Nossal

Chapter 8  The End of International Relations?
Martin Griffiths and Terry O‘Callaghan

Chapter 9  Fog in the Channel: Continental International Relations Theory Isolated (Or an essay on the Paradoxes of Diversity and Parochialism in IR Theory)
Chris Brown

Chapter 10  Where Have All the Theorists Gone—Gone to Britain, Every One? A Story of Two Parochialisms in International Relations
Robert M. A. Crawford

Chapter 11  Above the “American Discipline”: A Canadian Perspective on Epistemological and Pedagogical Diversity
Mark Neufeld and Teresa Healy

Chapter 12  Transcending National Identity: The Global Political Economy of Gender and Class
Jan Pettman

PART III  Toward Diversity in International Thought

Chapter 13  International Relations and Cognate Disciplines: From Economics to Historical Sociology
James L. Richardson

Chapter 14  At the Wood’s Edge: Toward a Theoretical Clearing for Indigenous Diplomacies in International Relations
Roger Epp

Chapter 15  Out with Theory—In with Practical Reflection: Toward a New Understanding of Realist Moral Skepticism
Roger D. Spegele

Chapter 16  Beyond International Relations: Edward Said and the World
Pal Ahluwalia and Michael Sullivan