

A 348899

Global Governance and the New Wars

The Merging of Development and Security

MARK DUFFIELD
//

Zed Books
LONDON & NEW YORK

Contents

|                              |      |
|------------------------------|------|
| Acknowledgements      | viii |
| List of abbreviations | ix   |

|   |           |
|---|-----------|
| 1 INTRODUCTION                                 | 1  |
| The New Development–Security Terrain                  |           |
| From a capitalist to a liberal world system           | 2         |
| The ambivalence of Southern exclusion                 | 5         |
| The internationalisation of public policy             | 7         |
| Liberal peace   | 9         |
| The new wars  | 13        |
| The merging of development and security               | 15        |
| The organisation of this book                         | 17        |
| 2 THE MERGING OF DEVELOPMENT AND SECURITY      | 22 |
| The demise of alternatives to liberal governance      | 22        |
| From inclusion to underdevelopment becoming dangerous | 26        |
| New imperialism or liberal peace?                     | 31        |
| The reproblematisation of security                    | 35        |
| The radicalisation of development                     | 37        |
| Concluding remarks                                    | 42        |
| 3 STRATEGIC COMPLEXES AND GLOBAL GOVERNANCE    | 44 |
| The qualification of nation-state competence          | 46        |
| Liberal strategic complexes                           | 50        |
| Non-governmental organisations                        | 53        |
| Military establishments                               | 57        |
| The commercial sector                                 | 61        |

CONTENTS

|          |   |            |
|----------|---|------------|
|          | Multilateral and regional organisations   | 71         |
|          | Donor governments   | 72         |
|          | Consensus and governance networks   | 73         |
| 4 | THE NEW HUMANITARIANISM  | 75  |
|          | Requiem for the prophets  | 76         |
|          | From cosmic machines to living systems  | 82         |
|          | The politicisation of development discourse                                       | 85         |
|          | The demise of operational neutrality  | 88         |
|          | The rise of consequentialist ethics   | 90         |
|          | Ethics and humanitarian conditionality  | 93         |
|          | Politics as policy  | 95         |
|          | Linking relief and development as a governance relation                           | 98         |
|          | Deepening the relations of liberal governance                                     | 102        |
|          | Concluding remarks  | 106        |
| 5 | GLOBAL GOVERNANCE AND THE CAUSES OF CONFLICT                               | 108 |
|          | New barbarism and biocultural determination                                       | 109        |
|          | Underdevelopment as dangerous   | 113        |
|          | Conflict and the reinvention of development                                       | 117        |
|          | Poverty and conflict  | 121        |
|          | The poor as allies of liberal peace   | 126        |
|          | The delegitimation of leadership  | 128        |
| 6 | THE GROWTH OF TRANSBORDER SHADOW ECONOMIES                                 | 136 |
|          | Social regression or social transformation?                                       | 136        |
|          | The limits of the formal economy  | 140        |
|          | Non-formal economies  | 144        |
|          | A complex transborder shadow economy: the coffee tradeacross Sudan's war zone | 153        |
|          | Non-liberal characteristics of non-formal economies                               | 156        |
|          | Revisiting underdevelopment as dangerous  | 159        |
| 7 | NON-LIBERAL POLITICAL COMPLEXES AND THE NEW WARS                           | 161 |
|          | Complex political emergencies or emerging politicalcomplexes?                 | 161        |
|          | From nation states to multiple authorities  | 163        |
|          | The privatisation of protection   | 170        |
|          | Protection and authority among state incumbents                                   | 178        |
|          | The new wars as network war   | 187        |

CONTENTS

|           |   |     |
|-----------|---|-----|
| 8  | INTERNAL DISPLACEMENT AND THE NEW HUMANITARIANISM                  |     |
|           | Displacement and Complicity in Sudan (Part 1)                             | 202 |
|           | A note on the political economy of Northern Sudan                         | 205 |
|           | Development discourse and internal displacement                           | 208 |
|           | Wealth ranking and natural economy  | 213 |
|           | De-ethnicisation and self-management                                      | 215 |
|           | Internal displacement as economic migration                               | 218 |
|           | Rights-based development and consequentialist ethics                      | 221 |
|           | Protection and self-management  | 224 |
|           | Minimum operational standards and complexity                              | 225 |
| 9  | AID AND SOCIAL SUBJUGATION   |     |
|           | Displacement and Complicity in Sudan (Part 2)                             | 230 |
|           | Advantages to dominant networks   | 230 |
|           | Cheap and desocialised labour   | 231 |
|           | Representation, debt and clientage  | 236 |
|           | Looting and asset realisation   | 241 |
|           | Institutional advantages  | 244 |
|           | Dependency revisited  | 247 |
|           | Aid policy and complexity   | 251 |
|           | Concluding remarks: peace and the reinvention of development              | 254 |
| 10 | CONCLUSION: GLOBAL GOVERNANCE, MORAL RESPONSIBILITY AND COMPLEXITY |     |
|           | Internal Displacement and the New Humanitarianism                         | 257 |
|           | A cosmopolitan politics?  | 257 |
|           | Rediscovering research as a moral force                                   | 259 |
|           | Organisational reform and complexity                                      | 261 |
|           | BIBLIOGRAPHY   | 266 |
|           | INDEX  | 280 |