HAROLD WILSON
and
EUROPEAN INTEGRATION
Britain's Second Application to Join the EEC

Edited by
OLIVER J. DADDOW
King's College London at the Joint Services
Command and Staff College

With a Foreword by Baroness Williams of Crosby

FRANK CASS
LONDON • PORTLAND, OR Contents

Notes on Contributors vii
Foreword by Baroness Williams of Crosby x
Acknowledgements xiv
List of Abbreviations xv

1 Introduction: The Historiography of Wilson’s Attempt to Take Britain into the EEC 1
Oliver J. Daddow

PART I: THE DOMESTIC CONTEXT

2 The Labour Party, Public Opinion and the ‘Second Try’ in 1967 39
Anne Deighton
3 The Conservatives and the Wilson Application 56
Philip Lynch
4 Gone Native: The Foreign Office and Harold Wilson’s Policy Towards the EEC, 1964–67 75
Helen Parr
5 Technological Cooperation in Wilson’s Strategy for EEC Entry 95
John W. Young
6 The Confederation of British Industry and European Integration in the 1960s 115
Neil Rollings

PART II: THE EXTERNAL CONTEXT

7 A Short-Term Defeat: The Community Institutions and the Second British Application to Join the EEC 135
N. Piers Ludlow
8 John Bull v. Marianne, Round Two: Anglo-French Relations and Britain’s Second EEC Membership Bid 151
Anthony Adamthwaite
9 Dealing with de Gaulle: Anglo-American Relations, NATO and the Second Application 172
James Ellison
10 From Imperial Power to Regional Powers: Commonwealth Crises and the Second Application
Philip Alexander
188
11 ‘We Too Mean Business’: Germany and the Second British Application to the EEC, 1966–67
Katharina Böhmer
211
12 Ireland and Britain’s Second Application to Join the EEC
Jane Toomey
227
13 Conclusion: The Ironies of ‘Successful Failure’
Peter Catterall
243

Appendix I:
Labour Cabinet Members, October 1964–June 1970
253

Appendix II:
Chronology of European Integration and the British Approach, 1964–70
257

Bibliography
263

Index
283