China's Relations with Arabia and the Gulf 1949–1999

Mohamed Bin Huwaidin
Contents

List of tables ix
Acknowledgements xi

PART I
Introduction 1

1 General elements and literature review 3

Focus and purpose of the study 3
Significance of the study 3
Why study China? 4
Literature survey 7
Chapter plan 18

PART II
China’s foreign policy in a global context 21

2 Theorizing China’s foreign policy 23

Internal factors 24
External factors 38
Conclusion 51

3 China’s relations with the United States, the Soviet Union, and Russia 53

China’s early interactions with the superpowers (1949–1954) 53
China and the changing of its foreign policy strategy (1955–1969) 56
China and the policy of leaning towards the United States (1970–1981) 63
China’s independent foreign policy (1982–1990) 68
PART III
China’s foreign policy toward the Gulf and Arabian Peninsula region

4 China’s perceptions of the Gulf and Arabian Peninsula region

Phase 1: China’s early involvement in the region (1949–1970) 96
Phase 2: China’s pragmatic foreign policy towards the region (1971–1989) 104
Phase 3: China’s new interest in the region (1990–1999) 119
Oil 131
Conclusion 134

5 China’s relations with Iraq, Iran, and Yemen

China and Iraq 136
China and Iran 153
China and Yemen 173
Conclusion 185

6 China’s relations with the countries of the Gulf Co-operation Council

China and Kuwait 188
China and Oman 201
China and Saudi Arabia 213
China and the UAE 236
China and Qatar 250
China and Bahrain 256
Conclusion 260

PART IV
Conclusion 263

7 Summary, conclusions, and some remarks for future relations 265

Appendix 275
Bibliography 285
Index 303