PEACEKEEPING INTELLIGENCE

New players, extended boundaries

Edited by David Carment and Martin Rudner
CONTENTS

List of illustrations xi
List of contributors xiii
Foreword xix
Acknowledgments xxvii
List of abbreviations xxix

1 Peacekeeping intelligence: extending partnerships and boundaries for peacekeeping 1
DAVID CARMENT, MARTIN RUDNER, AND RACHEL LEA HEIDE

PART I
Peacekeeping and its intelligence requirements 15

2 Beyond the next hill: the future of military intelligence in peace support operations 17
ROBERT MARTYN

3 A reading of tea leaves—toward a framework for modern peacekeeping intelligence 32
MICHAEL A. HENNESSY

4 SIGINT and peacekeeping: the untapped intelligence resource 41
MATTHEW M. AID

5 C4ISR: the unified theory of support to military operations 58
GEORGE KOLISNEK
PART II
Evolution of intelligence in multinational peacekeeping missions

6 Intelligence at United Nations headquarters?
The Information and Research Unit and the intervention in eastern Zaire (1996)
WALTER DORN

7 International anarchy and coalition interoperability in high-tech environments
PAUL T. MITCHELL

8 Peacekeeping intelligence and civil society:
Is CIMIC the missing link?
CHRISTOPHER ANKERSEN

PART III
New elements of intelligence analysis

9 Field research on small arms and light weapons and their importance for peace operations: a practitioner's view
ERIC G. BERMANN

10 Peacekeeping intelligence for the stakeholders: an underutilized open resource
DOUGLAS BOND AND PATRICK MEIER

11 Just peacekeeping: managing the relationship between peacekeeping intelligence and the prevention and punishment of international crimes
CHRISTOPHER K. PENNY

12 The ethics of intelligence in peace support operations
ANGELA GENDRON

13 Enabling intelligence in peacekeeping: laying the groundwork for effective education and training
ROBERT HEIBEL, TAMAL BHATTACHARYA, AND KRISTAN J. WHEATON
CONTENTS

14 A bridge too far?: The theory and practice of the effects-based concept and the multinational inter-agency role 188

ROBERT GROSSMAN-VERMAAS

Index 210