Luca Ratti

Italy and NATO Expansion to the Balkans
An Examination of Realist Theoretical Frameworks

Carocci editore
Preface 7

Introduction 9

1. International relations theory and foreign policy studies in Italy 13

1.1. Introduction 13
1.2. International relations studies in Italy 13
1.3. Mapping international relations theory 15
1.4. Contending perspectives 17
   1.4.1. Realism / 1.4.2. Liberalism and liberal-institutionalism /
   1.4.3. Neo-Marxist theories / 1.4.4. Social-constructivism
1.5. Future prospects 29

2. Italian foreign and security policy during the Cold War: a theoretical evaluation 31

2.1. Introduction 31
2.2. Security policy during the Cold War: realism, social-constructivism, and the Cold War 32
2.3. Italy and the Cold War 36
2.4. Italian foreign and security policy during the Cold War 47
   2.4.1. From the peace treaty to the 1948 elections / 2.4.2.
   Membership of NATO / 2.4.3. European integration / 2.4.4.
   From the EEC to the compromesso storico / 2.4.5. Italian foreign policy during the 1980s
2.5. System influence or domestic factors? 74
3. The post-Cold War scenario: theoretical perspectives and empirical analysis

3.1. Introduction

3.2. Security policy after the Cold War
   3.2.1. Realism, liberalism, social-constructivism, and the end of the Cold War
   3.2.2. Realism, constructivism, and the concept of national security after the Cold War

3.3. Italy and the end of the Cold War
   3.3.1. The political and institutional transition
   3.3.2. What foreign policy should Italy have?

3.4. Italian foreign and security policy after the Cold War
   3.4.1. From the theory to the practice: Italy and the Yugoslav crisis
   3.4.2. The confirmation of NATO
   3.4.3. NATO and the European security and defence identity
   3.4.4. The foreign policy of the Freedom House government

3.5. Domestic change, foreign policy continuity?

4. The expansion of NATO: theoretical perspectives, Italy, and the Balkans

4.1. Introduction

4.2. NATO expansion: the limitations of realism

4.3. Italy and NATO expansion to the Balkans

4.4. Italy and the exclusion of the Balkan candidates

4.5. Italy, Russia and NATO expansion

4.6. NATO expansion: the second round

4.7. Between strategic interests and the spread of liberal democracy

Conclusions. From neo-classical and defensive realism to a “thicker” version of realism

Bibliography

Index of names