Ethics and War in the 21st Century

Christopher Coker
Contents

Preface ix

1 The war on terror 1
   A new discourse on war? 1
   Richard Rorty and the ethics of war 7
   Conclusion 15

2 Etiquettes of atrocity 17
   Etiquettes of atrocity 17
   Why we take prisoners of war 24
   Discourses on war 30
   Keeping to the discourse 35
   The United States and Vietnam 36
   Carl Schmitt and the Theory of the Partisan 44
   Conclusion 52

3 Changing the discourse 54
   Germany and the Eastern Front 1941–5 54
   Algeria and the guerre revolutionaire 61
   Israel and the intifada 67
   Conclusion 74

4 A new discourse 77
   Excluding from the discourse on war:
      from Guantanamo to Abu Ghraib 77
   Is it a war? 79
   A new paradigm? 87
   New wars, new paradigms 95
   Conclusion 112
Contents

5 Grammars of killing 114
   Grammars of killing 115
   Respecting our enemies 124
   Non-lethal weapons 127
   Conclusion 131

6 The unconditional imperative 132
   Micro-management of the battlefield 134
   Corporate warriors? 138
   Asimov’s children 143
   Conclusion 152

7 Back to the Greeks 155
   Back to the Greeks? 155
   Simone Weil and The Iliad 157
   Reading Thucydides 160
   What is Hecuba to him? 165

8 The heuristics of fear 169
   The ambiguity of peace 170
   Towards the future 174

Notes 176
Bibliography 189
Index 193