

SUB Hamburg

A/532422

---

Ireland and the Spanish Empire, 1600–1825

Óscar Recio Morales

FOUR COURTS PRESS

Contents

|                                                                                         |      |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------|
| List of illustrations                                                                   | vii  |
| Foreword by Professor Ciaran Brady                                               | ix   |
| Acknowledgments                                                                         | xv   |
| Maps                                                                                    | xiii |
| List of abbreviations                                                                   | xix  |
| Notes on terminology, ranks, dates and currency                                         | xxi  |
| Introduction                                                                            | I    |
| 1. Basis for the engagement                                                             | 7    |
| 1. The 'new history' on Irish migration to Spain                                        | 16   |
| 2. Foreign interference or long-term strategy?                                          | 20   |
| 3. From Hibernia fabulosa to real Ireland                                        | 29   |
| 2. Philip III of Spain and Ireland, 1602–1621: a non-conventional reign                 | 48   |
| 1. Lobbying: the Irish groups at the Spanish court                                      | 52   |
| 2. Success and failure of the Irish political strategy at the court                     | 68   |
| 3. From Irish lords to Spanish knights                                                  | 76   |
| 4. Mass-migration and exclusion                                                         | 85   |
| 3. Natural allies? Irish expectations and Spanish exhaustion, 1621–1690                 | 102  |
| 1. The assault on Ulster, 1627                                                          | 104  |
| 2. The Madrid–Kilkenny axis, 1641                                                       | 113  |
| 3. The opportunity of war: Irish recruits for Spain                                     | 127  |
| 4. Collapse, 1647–1690                                                                  | 153  |
| 4. Renewing loyalty: the Irish community in eighteenth-century Spain, 1691–1754         | 167  |
| 1. Ireland in eighteenth-century Spanish foreign policy                                 | 169  |
| 2. The making of the Irish group at the Spanish Bourbon court                           | 179  |
| 3. Room for privilege and spaces of social advancement:the Irish regiments in Spain | 183  |
| Professional integration: recruitment and military career                               | 188  |
| The quest for honour: the social integration of the Irish officer                       | 218  |
| Service fatigue: discipline and casualties                                              | 224  |

CONTENTS

|                                                                                   |     |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 5. The Irish hour in Spain, 1754–1825                                             | 235 |
| 1. Closing ranks: the Irish in power                                              | 238 |
| 2. Business and manners: the ‘eminent’ Irish merchant in eighteenth-century Spain | 257 |
| 3. Time to choose: Irishness under pressure                                       | 269 |
| 4. ‘Doing the Americas’: the Irish in the Spanish colonies                        | 284 |
| Epilogue                                                                          | 296 |
| Sources and bibliography                                                          | 301 |
| Index                                                                             | 325 |