The Art of Americanization at the Carlisle Indian School

Hayes Peter Mauro

University of New Mexico Press
Albuquerque
Contents

Introduction

Chapter One. The "Savage" and Antebellum Science

- The Indian Body as Tabula Rasa
- The Birth of "Scientific" Knowledge and the "Purity" of the Native Body
- Science, Art, and Democracy: Phrenology Gains a Foothold in America
- The Scientific Savage: Samuel Morton, Measurement, and Proving Savagery

Chapter Two. Producing the Indian: Indexing and Pathologizing the Native American

- Clark Mills, Phrenology, and a National Ideal
- Visualizing Indianness: The Smithsonian and Ethnographic Collecting

Chapter Three. Producing Americans: Photography and Indoctrination at Carlisle

- Photography, Race, and the Exigencies of Representation
- Pratt, Choate, and the Politics of Photographing Indians
- New Arrivals: To the Ends of the Earth

Chapter Four. Photography and Indoctrination II: The Before-and-After Portrait

- Tom Torlino: A Photographic Odyssey
- White Buffalo: The Body as Tourist Art

Chapter Five. Publicizing the "Civilized" Savage

- Phrenology, the Boarding School, and the "Red Man" at the White City
- Frances Benjamin Johnston, Hampton, and the Carlisle Album
- A Photographic Native Voice at Carlisle
- Imaging the "Manly" Native Body

Conclusion

- The Limits of Assimilationist Representation

Notes

Bibliography

Index

Illustrations follow page