Kant and International Relations Theory
Cosmopolitan community-building

Dora Ion
Contents

List of tables xi
Acknowledgments xii

1 Introduction 1

2 Background 5
2.1 The "Perpetual Peace" essay: its place and role in Kant's work 5
2.2 Conventional interpretations of Kant in empirical international relations theory 10
2.3 Kant in liberal normative analyses: the Kantianism of John Rawls and the cosmopolitan critique 18
2.4 Kant between contractarian and republican traditions 25
2.5 Kant's republican continental tradition versus the liberal tradition 32
2.6 Kant, a republican cosmopolitan 36
2.7 Community theories 37

3 The Kantian peace as a process of cosmopolitan community-building 40
3.1 Compatibility between Kant's cosmopolitanism and statism 41
3.2 Kant's view of international conflict 45
3.3 Material aspects of Kantian justice 54
3.4 Cosmopolitan community-building as a process of perpetual peace 59

4 Towards Perpetual Peace 61
4.1 The debate on "Perpetual Peace" and the controversy around the First Supplement 62
4.2 The Preliminary Articles 66
4.3 Kant's solutions to international illegitimacy 68
4.4 Other solutions to international illegitimacy: publicity and philosophers in the Appendixes and Second Supplement 75
4.5 The Definitive Articles from the perspective of cosmopolitan community-building 78

5 Comparative conceptions and critiques of democratic peace theory 88
   5.1 Michael Doyle and the liberal peace 89
   5.2 Russett's versions of democratic peace theory 94
   5.3 Owen's ideological argument 99
   5.4 Maoz and Russett 103
   5.5 Oneal and Russett's "triangulating peace" 104
   5.6 Other "Kantian" applications 109
   5.7 The critiques of democratic peace 111

6 Comparative conceptions and critiques of peaceful communities of states 114
   6.1 Deutsch's pluralistic security communities 114
   6.2 Kacowicz's zones of peace 126
   6.3 Crawford's Iroquois League 131
   6.4 Foltz's Mali Federation 135
   6.5 Cosmopolitan democracy 137
   6.6 The cosmopolitan communitarian model 142

7 Concluding remarks and reflections on the European Union 146

Notes 151
Kant's works cited 162
Bibliography 163
Index 170