Ideology and Foreign Policy in Early Modern Europe (1650–1750)

DAVID ONNEKINK
Universiteit Utrecht, NL

GIJS ROMMELSE
The Netherlands Institute of Military History, The Hague, NL

ASHGATE
Contents

List of figures vii
Notes on contributors ix
Acknowledgements xiii

Introduction 1
David Onnekink and Gijs Rommelse

Response to introduction: ‘ideology’, factions and foreign politics in early modern Europe 11
Robert von Friedeburg

1 Absolutism, ideology and English foreign policy: the ideological context of Robert Molesworth’s Account of Denmark 29
Steve Pincus

2 Partisan politics, history and the national interest (1700–1748) 55
Gary Evans

3 From ‘jealous emulation’ to ‘cautious politics’: British foreign policy and public discourse in the mirror of ancient Athens (ca. 1730–ca. 1750) 93
Doohwan Ahn

4 The ideological context of the Dutch war (1672) 131
David Onnekink

5 Ideologies of interests in English foreign policy during the reign of Charles II 145
Stéphane Jettot

6 Holy war and republican pacifism in the early-eighteenth-century Commonwealth of Poland-Lithuania 163
Benedict Wagner-Rundell

7 Justifying war: churchmen and war in France and England during the Nine Years War (1688–1697) 181
Solange Rameix
8  Romeyn de Hooghe and the imagination of Dutch foreign policy  197
    Henk van Nierop

9  A change of ideology in Imperial Spain? Spanish commercial policy  215 with America and the change of dynasty (1648—1740)
    Ana Crespo Solana

10 Mountains of iron and gold: mercantilist ideology in Anglo-Dutch  243 relations (1650—1674)
    Gijs Rommelse

11 Balancing Europe: ideas and interests in British foreign policy  267
    (c. 1700—c. 1720)
    Andrew C. Thompson

12 ‘To restore and preserve the liberty of Europe’: William III’s ideas on  283
    foreign policy
    Wout Troost

Index  305