MISFORTUNES AND SHIPWRECKS
IN THE SEAS OF THE INDIES, ISLANDS, AND MAINLAND OF
THE OCEAN SEA (1513–1548)

Book Fifty of the General and Natural History of the Indies

Gonzalo Fernández de Oviedo, translated and edited by Glen F. Dille
Contents

List of Maps xi
Acknowledgments xiii
Translator's Introduction xv

Book Fifty Prolog 1

CHAPTER I. Of the father and son who were adrift on a plank 5

CHAPTER II. Of a ship that departed this city of Santo Domingo on the island of Hispaniola and struck a rock on this coast 7

CHAPTER III. Of a ship that was lost on the coast of Tierra Firme 9

CHAPTER IV. Of a ship that sank in the Ocean Sea three hundred leagues from land 14

CHAPTER V. Of a Portuguese youth who ... dove into the water ... to swim to another ship of the fleet 17

CHAPTER VI. Of two ships coming from Spain to ... Hispaniola; and the one ... was shipwrecked ... and how two days later the second ship ran aground and sank 21

CHAPTER VII. Of a ship many leagues out to sea that caught fire which was miraculously extinguished 23

CHAPTER VIII. Of three ships two hundred or more leagues out to sea that miraculously escaped disaster with all their people aboard 26

CHAPTER IX. Of the caravel they call the Taviras' for the marvelous thing ... that God and His Glorious Mother did for these women 29

CHAPTER X. How Licentiate Alonso Zuazo's caravel was wrecked on the Alacranes Islands with almost fifty-five or sixty persons 33
CHAPTER XI. Of the shipwreck that happened to Baltasar de Castro and others on a ship from Spain bound for this island of Hispaniola 80

CHAPTER XII. Of the strange case of Juan de Lepe ... on the island of Hispaniola 80

CHAPTER XIII. Of the unfortunate fate of a certain fleet from which thirty companions were cast ashore in Tierra Firme 81

CHAPTER XIV. Of the admirable case of a Venetian sailor who was marooned on an island for two years, and of another Genoese marooned for eight years 81

CHAPTER XV. Of the misfortune that befell a captain named Benito Hurtado and his people at sea and on land in Tierra Firme 81

CHAPTER XVI. Of a shipwreck in which the Mother of God worked her marvels for the ship’s master named Baltasar de Chaves 82

CHAPTER XVII. Of the wreck of a ship that embarked from this city of Santo Domingo on the island of Hispaniola 82

CHAPTER XVIII. Of a very notable case that happened a few years ago to one Antonio de Palenzuela on the coast of Tierra Firme 83

CHAPTER XIX. Of what happened to Master Francisco de Santa Ana ... and to others with him on a ship ... bound for Spain 83

CHAPTER XX. Of the several wrecks of Cristóbal de Sanabria ... and of the others who were with him 84

CHAPTER XXI. Of the unfortunate event and shipwreck ... of a pilot named Juan Bermúdez 98

CHAPTER XXII. Of a shipwreck and the unfortunate events that happened to the survivors of the fleet [of] Licentiate Ayllón 101

CHAPTER XXIII. Of a shipwreck on the island of Cáliz ... of some Spaniards of the army of Governor Hierónimo Dortal 103

CHAPTER XXIV. [Gaspar de Carvajal's] report of the ... river called the Marañón, along which Captain Francisco de Orellana ... navigated more than two thousand leagues 107

CHAPTER XXV. Of the shipwreck ... that befell a reverend canon of the holy cathedral of this our city of Santo Domingo 148
CHAPTER XXVI. The marvelous case of a Portuguese ship that... left the port of... Santo Domingo to return to Portugal and... was blown to the island of Bermuda 152

CHAPTER XXVII. Of two hurricanes... that struck the island of Hispaniola... in the months of August and September of 1545 156

CHAPTER XXVIII. Of shipwrecks and the very marvelous occurrence [in 1548] that is here recounted 163

CHAPTER XXIX. Of another shipwreck that happened later in the same year as the previous one but with not such happy outcome 164

CHAPTER XXX. In which are the author's conclusion and defense of these histories to those who may see these materials 167

Notes 173
Bibliography 197
Index 203