Sport Pedagogy
An Introduction for Teaching and Coaching

Edited by
Kathleen Armour
University of Birmingham
Contents

Acknowledgements xvii

Introduction 1

Section 1
PEDAGOGY IN PHYSICAL EDUCATION AND YOUTH SPORT 9

1 What is ‘sport pedagogy’ and why study it? 11
Kathleen Armour

Why sport pedagogy? 11
So, what is sport pedagogy? 13
Pedagogy revealed . . . and confounded 15
Sport pedagogy revealed . . . and confounded 18
Conclusion 21
Learning tasks 22

2 Children learning in physical education: a historical overview 24
David Kirk

Introduction 25
Physical education as drilling and exercising, 1906 26
Anyone for tennis (by numbers)? 1920s 28
Freeing the body through educational gymnastics, 1951 29
The masculinisation of physical education as gymnastics, Carnegie, 1950s 31
Discontinuity and continuity: the silences of and echoes from the past? 34
Conclusion 37
Learning tasks 37

3 Learning theory for effective learning in practice 39
Fiona Chambers

Introduction 39
Metaphors to explain learning 40
Behaviourism 41
Cognitivism 44
Constructivism 45
Social theories of learning 48
Conclusion 50
Learning tasks 50
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Chapter</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Subtitles</th>
</tr>
</thead>
</table>
| 4       | Learning about health through physical education and youth sport | Learning about health through physical education and youth sport 53
Lorraine Cale and Jo Harris
Introduction 53
The role of physical education and youth sport in promoting learning about health 54
Learning about health within the PE curriculum 56
Issues 56
Perspectives on learning about health 58
Health-related knowledge and professional development 59
Conclusion 61
Learning tasks 61  |
| 5       | Critical health pedagogy: whose body is it anyway? | Critical health pedagogy: whose body is it anyway? 65
John Evans, Emma Rich and Brian Davies
Introduction 65
Why has ‘health’ become such an important topic? 66
Why are fat facts potentially so dangerous? 68
 Allocating blame: good food, bad food – good citizens, bad citizens! 69
Voices: don’t blame the victim 70
Conclusion 73
Learning tasks 73  |
| 6       | Youth sport policy: an international perspective | Youth sport policy: an international perspective 77
Lain Lindsey and Ruth Jeanes
Introduction 77
Youth sport policy in England 78
Youth sport policy in Australia 81
Youth sport policy in Zambia 83
What can we learn from this comparative analysis? 85
Conclusion 86
Learning tasks 87  |
| 7       | Olympism: a learning philosophy for physical education and youth sport | Olympism: a learning philosophy for physical education and youth sport 90
Dikai Chatziefstathiou
What is Olympism? 90
The critiques of Olympism 93
Olympism as a learning philosophy 94
Pierre de Coubertin’s Olympic pedagogy 95
Olympic education as pedagogy through sport and culture 96
Olympic education as physical education 97
Olympic education as a focus on values education 97  |
Contents

Olympic education as interdisciplinary learning 98
Conclusion 99
Learning tasks 99

Section 2
CHILDREN AND YOUNG PEOPLE: DIVERSE LEARNERS IN PHYSICAL EDUCATION AND YOUTH SPORT 103

8 Youth voices in physical education and sport: what are they telling us and what do they say they need? 105
Ann MacPhail
Introduction 105
Youth voices in physical education and sport 106
What young people tell us about their experiences of physical education 107
What young people tell us about their experiences of youth sport 110
Conclusion 113
Learning tasks 114

9 Understanding young people’s motivation in physical education and youth sport 116
Christopher M. Spray
What does motivation look like? 117
Personal and situational goals: ‘What am I aiming to achieve?’ 118
Beliefs about ability: ‘Is it possible to improve?’ 119
Physical self-concept: ‘How do I feel about myself physically?’ 120
Self-determination: ‘Do I want to do it?’ 121
Social comparison processes: ‘What are my teammates or classmates like?’ 122
Conclusion 124
Learning tasks 124

10 Young people, sporting bodies, vulnerable identities 127
Laura Azzarito
Introduction 127
Young bodies and identities in sport 128
Media as a site of young people’s embodied learning about sporting bodies 129
Young people’s embodiment of ‘sporting bodies’: sites of vulnerability? 131
Sporting bodies through Ammera’s and Robert’s eyes 133
Conclusion 136
Learning tasks 137
11 Playtime: the needs of very young learners in physical education and sport
Frances Murphy and Dierdre Ni Chroinin
Introduction 140
Physical activity settings for young children: learning through play 141
The needs of young learners 144
Physical domain 144
Affective domain 146
Cognitive domain 148
Integrated learning 149
Meeting children’s needs: implications for practice 150
Conclusion 150
Learning tasks 151

12 Disabling experiences of physical education and youth sport
Hayley Fitzgerald
Introduction 153
The contested nature of disability 155
Striving to ‘include’ in physical education and sport 158
Mapping experiences of physical education and sport 160
Conclusion 161
Learning tasks 162

13 Disaffected youth in physical education and youth sport
Rachel Sandford and Rebecca Duncombe
Introduction 165
Disaffection, disengagement and disruption: defining the problem 166
Re-engagement through physical education and youth sport 167
Two sport/physical activity re-engagement programmes 168
Implications for programme design 172
Conclusion 174
Learning tasks 175

14 Barriers to learning in physical education and youth sport: does social class still matter?
Symeon Dagkas
Introduction 178
Exploring ‘social class’ 179
Defining social class 179
‘Habitus’ and capital 181
Social class and inequalities in youth sport 183
Section 3
BEING A PROFESSIONAL TEACHER OR COACH IN PHYSICAL EDUCATION AND YOUTH SPORT 227

18 Effective career-long professional development for teachers and coaches 229
Kathleen Armour

Introduction 230
Teachers and coaches talking about professional development 231
What research tells us about effective and ineffective CPD 232
Learning and professional development 235
CPD policy for teachers and coaches 238
Evaluating CPD effectiveness 239
Learning tasks 241

19 Personalised learning: a perfect pedagogy for teachers and coaches? 244
Kyriaki Makopoulou

Introduction 244
What is personalised learning? 245
Is personalised learning a new idea? 246
What kind of learners and learning? 248
Personalised learning in physical education and youth sport 250
Personalised learning in practice 252
Conclusion: is personalised learning the 'perfect pedagogy'? 254
Learning tasks 255

20 Becoming an effective secondary school physical education teacher 258
Frank Herold

Introduction 258
Professional values, personal philosophies and the teaching of PE 259
What does it take to become an effective secondary PE teacher? 261
Knowledge, understanding and skills 264
What should we know about how PE should be taught? 265
Conclusion 268
Learning tasks 268

21 Becoming an effective primary school physical education teacher 271
Mike Jess

Introduction 271
Teaching primary PE: why is it easy? 273
Teaching primary PE: it's complex 273
22 Becoming an effective youth sport coach
Julia Walsh

Introduction
What the research tells us about effective coaching
Coaching behaviours: what and how do I coach?
Coaching knowledge: what do I need to know?
Coaching frameworks: the bigger picture
Coach development: the start of the journey
Coaching context: decision making starts here!
Becoming an effective youth coach: getting started
Conclusion
Learning tasks

23 Mentoring as a professional learning strategy
Mark Griffiths

Introduction
Mentoring attributes
Learning as social practice: examining mentoring through relational learning theories
Mentoring model: ‘a configuration of relationships’
Implications for practice: mentoring as a learning strategy
Conclusion
Learning tasks

24 Professional learning in communities of practice
Deborah Tannehill

Introduction
What is a community of practice?
Communities in physical education and sport
Building a community of practice
Community membership
Stages of development
Sustaining a community of practice
Classroom learning communities
Critical friends in teacher and coach education
Conclusion
Learning tasks
Contents

25 Models-based practice: structuring teaching and coaching to meet learners' diverse needs 325
   Toni O'Donovan
   Introduction 325
   What is models-based practice? 326
   Planning a quality physical education programme 327
   The multi-activity model: a traditional approach to programme planning 328
   The multi-model approach and instructional models 329
   What do teachers and coaches need to implement models-based practice successfully? 331
   Models-based practice in contemporary society 333
   Conclusion 334
   Learning tasks 335

Index 338