Foucault and the Politics of Hearing

Lauri Siisiäinen
Contents

Acknowledgments xi

Introduction 1

1 The archaeology of our ears 10
Murmur, madness, and language 10
The order of discourse and anonymous voice 19
The Birth of the Clinic and the exclusion of the “auditory-sonorous” 24
“Message or Noise?” 31
Confession and voice in Foucault’s early encounter with Jean-Jacques Rousseau 34
Metamorphoses of the ear: Renaissance, Classicism, modernity 42
From anonymous murmur to vocal knowledge and power 52

2 The genealogy of auditory-sonorous power and resistance 55
Surveillance and discipline: panoptic or panauditory power? 55
Panauditory surveillance and its fragility: “A King Listens” 60
Sexuality, confession, and the sensualization of power 66
Multitudes and noise-abatement 70
The liberal governmentality, homo oeconomicus, and the threat of noise 77

3 Voices of care, friendship, and parrésia 89
Care of the self and the interior voice 89
Education, sonorous power, and the struggle of voices 93