Hong Kong's Governance Under Chinese Sovereignty
The failure of the state–business alliance after 1997

Brian C. H. Fong
Contents

List of figures xi
List of tables xiii

PART I
Governance under hybrid regimes: the case of Hong Kong 1

1 Governance crisis in post-1997 Hong Kong: in search of a new theoretical explanation 3

The politics of hybrid regimes: the case of Hong Kong 3
The mainstream explanation of legitimacy deficit: the challenges of the democratic opposition under the hybrid regime 18
Going beyond the mainstream explanation: from opposition-centred explanation to a critical analysis of governing coalition building 27
Synthesis of the argument and its theoretical implications: a new theoretical explanation on Hong Kong’s governance 32
The research design of this book 37
Conclusion 40

2 Governance and the state: revisiting the concepts and theories of state capacity 50

The capacity of the state to govern: state capacity defined 50
State capacity as political autonomy 53
State capacity as embedded autonomy 58
State capacity as governed interdependence 59
State capacity as state–society synergy 61
State capacity as forging coalitions 64
Contents

An integrated conceptual framework: state capacity as governing coalition building 65
Conclusion 69

PART II

The legacy of state–business alliance: from the colonial time to the transitional period 71

3 Reinterpreting governance and state capacity in colonial time: the colonial state–business alliance 73

The nature of the colonial state: an administrative state dominated by bureaucrats 73
The making of the capitalist class: the emergence of British and Chinese merchants 76
State–business relations in colonial times: the formation and evolution of the state–business alliance 79
Governing coalition building in colonial times: how did the state–business alliance contribute to the effective governance in colonial Hong Kong? 82
Conclusion 97

4 The crafting of the post-1997 state–business alliance: Beijing’s governing strategy after 1997 103

The politics of transition and the crafting of the post-1997 political order 104
The making of the post-1997 state–business alliance: the convergence of interests between Beijing and the local capitalist class 106
The rise of a new China-centred state–business alliance: the co-option of the business sector by Beijing since the 1980s 112
Conclusion 115
PART III
Missing link between state, business and society: the growing erosion of the intermediary role of business elites after 1997

5 The missing link between state and business: the fragmentation of agents of business interests

The end of the traditional business representation system: the changing configuration of the economic and political structures since the 1980s 122
Who can represent the business sector in the post-1997 political-economic order? The underdevelopment of business-oriented political parties 131
Implications of the fragmentation of agents of business interests: the paradox of “strong business representation, weak political support” 142
Conclusion 154

6 The widening gap between state and society: the growing disconnection of the business sector from the local community

The dominant representation of business elites in the advisory bodies after 1997: old wine in a new bottle 160
New challenges for the state–business alliance: the rise of civil society activism 162
Implications of the growing disconnection of the business sector: the widening gap between the post-colonial state and the society 168
Conclusion 174

PART IV
Uneasy partnership between state and business: the rising power leverage of the business sector in post-1997 Hong Kong

7 Institutionalization of business power under the HKSAR political system: Chief Executive Election Committee and functional constituencies

The constitutional design of the post-1997 political system: the making of the state–business alliance 183
x Contents

Chief Executive Election Committees: institutionalization of business power in the executive branch 185
Functional constituency electoral system and voting-by-group system of the Legislative Council: institutionalization of business power in the legislative process 196
Implications of the institutionalization of business power under the HKSAR political system: the unprecedented power bases for the business sector 201
Conclusion 205

8 The business sector's direct access to the sovereign state: the close partnership between Beijing and the local capitalists 210
The business sector's institutionalized access to the sovereign state: the National People's Congress and the National Committee of Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference 211
Political co-option of the business elites by the local agent of the sovereign state: the united front work of the Central Liaison Office 213
Business sector's increased economic links with the Mainland authorities: Mainland–Hong Kong economic integration and its political implications 218
Implications of the business sector's direct access to the sovereign state: the circumvention activities by the business elites 221
Conclusion 225

PART V
Rethinking Hong Kong's governance under Chinese sovereignty: from an opposition-centred explanation to a critical analysis of governing coalition building 231

9 Conclusion: rethinking the governance crisis in post-1997 Hong Kong 233
A new theoretical explanation on the governance crisis in post-1997 Hong Kong: the failure of the state–business alliance 234
Rethinking Hong Kong's governance crisis under Chinese sovereignty: legitimacy deficit or failure of governing coalition building? 243