The Crescent Remembered
Islam and Nationalism on the Iberian Peninsula

Patricia Hertel
Translated from the German by Ellen Yutzy Glebe

sussex
ACADEMIC PRESS
Brighton • Chicago • Toronto
Contents

Series Editor’s Preface vii
Preface and Acknowledgements ix
List of Illustrations xi

Introduction
Europe and Islam: Encounters, Memory, Imagination 1
Islam and Nationalism on the Iberian Peninsula: Research Questions 7
Methods and Sources 11
Research Overview 14
  - Religion and nation 14
  - Iberian history 15
  - Images of Islam in Spain and Portugal 16

1 Islam as a Historical Enemy: The Middle Ages as Portrayed in the Historiography
20
Islam in the Search for a “Ser de España” 20
  - Between aversion and fascination: Modesto Lafuente y Zamalloa 23
  - Exclusion: Marcelino Menéndez Pelayo 24
  - Marginalization: Manuel Merry y Colón 26
  - From religion to civilization: Rafael Altamira y Crevea 27
  - Cultural influence with reservations: Ramón Menéndez Pidal, Claudio Sánchez-Albornoz 29
Islam in the “nacionalismos periféricos”: The example of the Basque Country 31
Islam in the Search for Portuguese Origins 33
  - Demystification: Alexandre Herculano de Carvalho e Araujo 34
  - Instruction: Joaquin Pedro de Oliveira Martins 36
  - Romanticization: Joaquin Teófilo Fernandes Braga 38
  - Reluctance and acceptance: Catholic authors 39
Comparative Conclusions 41

2 Islam as an Object of Research: Integration of the Islamic Cultural Heritage
44
Spain’s Well-Known Heritage: The Idea of a “Spanish Islam” 44
Al-Andalus as national reference: Spanish Arabists interpret the past 44

Islamic architecture as national monument: The example of the Alhambra 52
Portugal's Forgotten Heritage: The Late Discovery of Islamic Roots 59
Portugal's origins: Portuguese Arabists interpret the past 59
The discovery of Islamic architecture: The example of Mértola 64
Comparative Conclusions 68

3 Islam as a “Colonial Other”: The Iberian Dictatorships 71
Spain: Struggle to Expand Power (1898–1956) 71
  Reluctance: Images of Islam in the Moroccan wars (1859–1921) 71
  Approaches: “Africanistas” before the Civil War (1909–1936) 77
  Propaganda: Islamic fear as a weapon in the Civil War (1936–1939) 80
  Appropriation: Discourses of brotherhood in early Francoism (1936–1956) 85
Portugal: Struggle to Maintain Power (1890–1974) 86
  Civilization: The idea of a Christian empire (1890–1945) 86
  Distrust: Islam as threat for the colonies (1945–1960) 89
  Integration: Towards a “Portuguese ecumenism” (1960–1974) 91
Comparative Conclusions 96

4 Islam as a National Lesson: Staging the Past 98
Islam as a Leading Actor: The “Moors of Our Days” in Spain 99
  History textbooks from the Spanish Restoration to Francoism 99
  Commemorations during the Restoration 106
Islam as a Supporting Actor: Heroes without Enemies in Portugal 111
  History textbooks from the Monarchy to the Estado Novo 111
  Commemorations in the Estado Novo (1939–1947) 117
Comparative Conclusions 122

5 Islam as Folkloristic Invention: Popular Festivals and Regional Identity 125
“Moors and Christians”: Festivals in Southern Valencia 126
  Invention of tradition: Nationalization of the festivals in the nineteenth century 126
  Prohibition, fraternization, reservation: The festivals as a reflection of twentieth-century politics 130
  Bugios, Turcos and Charlemagne: Festivals in Northern Portugal 133
    The mouro: His historical and mythical significance 133
    Representations of otherness 135
Comparative Conclusions 138

Conclusion 141

Notes, Bibliography & Index 152–232