Native American Women's Collaborative Autobiographies

Relational Science, Ethnographic Collaboration, and Tribal Community

Susan Berry Brill de Ramírez
Contents

Acknowledgments vii

1 Introduction: Women Ethnographers, Relational Science, and Native American Women Storytellers 1

2 Franc Johnson Newcomb’s Navajo Ethnography of Ahson Tsosie in Hosteen Klah 19

3 The Interwoven Stories of Maria Chona and Ruth M. Underhill: The Autobiography of a Papago Woman 43

4 “I’m going to tell you a story”: Mountain Wolf Woman and Transitional Ethnographic Relations 79

5 The Convergence of Life and Myth as Testimonio in Julie Cruikshank’s Life Lived Like a Story 107

6 Mrs. Angela Sidney’s Stories about the Gold Rush Years and their Colonizing Effects on the First Nations People of the Yukon 131

7 Indigenous Origination in Bighorse the Warrior by Tiana Bighorse and Noël Bennett 153

Epilogue: The Value of Women’s Relational Ethnographic Practice: Epistemology, Methodology, and Pedagogy 173

Bibliography 181

Index 195

About the Author 205