Imagining Sustainability
Creative Urban Environmental Governance in Chicago and Melbourne

Julie Cidell
Contents

List of illustrations vii
Acknowledgments viii

1 Introduction 1
1.1 Environmental actors within local governance systems 2
1.2 Imaginaries, creativity, and power 6
1.3 Diffraction and intra-action 11

2 The existing socio-environment 22
2.1 Natural histories of urbanization 24
2.2 The institutional environment 32
2.3 Socio-environmental events as catalysts 43
2.4 Changing institutional context 51

3 Envisioning the future through the sustainable imaginary 67
3.1 Vision and visibility 68
3.2 Dealing with the past 77
3.3 Responding to hazards and/or changing climate 88
3.4 Projecting forward existing ways of living, or imagining new futures? 99

4 How the socio-environment is (re)produced 105
4.1 Proper relationship between citizens and government 106
4.2 Creative governance and funding 116
4.3 Creative projects and programs 127
4.4 Sustaining the imaginary 137
5 Conclusion

5.1 Diffracting the sustainable imaginaries of Chicago and Melbourne 153

5.2 Diffractive patterns 156

5.3 Imagining sustainability and creativity 160

Index 162