A typology for the study of inertia

21 A typology for the study of inertia

22 Government/bureaucracy as a source of inertia

- General, cognitive inertia (box 7) 306
- General, institutional/procedural inertia (box 8) 310
- Vested interests in the status quo (box 9) 313
- Mode-specific, cognitive inertia (box 10) 317
- Mode-specific, institutional/procedural inertia (box 11) 318
- Mode-specific, vested interests (box 12) 322
- Studying bureaucracy – without ‘bureaucratic politics’ 325

23 The internal environment as a source of inertia

- General, cognitive inertia (box 1) 327
- General institutional/procedural inertia (box 2) 327
- Vested interests in the status quo (box 3) 328
- Mode-specific, cognitive inertia (box 4) 329
- Mode-specific, institutional/procedural inertia (box 5) 332
- Mode-specific, vested interests (box 6) 333

24 The external environment as a source of inertia

- General inertia (boxes 13–15) 335
- Mode-specific, cognitive inertia (box 16) 337
- Mode-specific, institutional/procedural inertia (box 17) 339
- Mode-specific, vested interests (box 18) 340

25 Conclusions on mode inertia

- Mode inertia in general: status on the typology 342
- Inertia in connection with adaptive acquiescence: our conclusions 345
- Inertia in our cases at hand 350
- Inertia in our cases at hand: a diachronic perspective 355

26 A rough step-model for the interplay of dynamics and inertia 357

27 The factors of inertia: can they supplement the ideal type? 361

PART V SOME FURTHER CASES THAT QUALIFY – AND SOME NOTES ON A RELATED POSTURE

28 Some further cases that qualify 365

- Finland 1944–present day 365
- South Africa 1984–present day 370

29 Direct adaptive acquiescence: why so infrequent? 373

30 Some candidates for future adaptive acquiescence 376

- Western Europe 376
- Eastern Europe 377
PART VI CONCLUSIONS AND WIDER PERSPECTIVES

32 Adaptive acquiescence: what do we mean and what do we know? 393
33 Methodological issues 402
   Ideal types and reality: tests, challenges and illustrations 402
   Some comments on comparativism 410
   Some notes on 'contemporary' vs. 'historical' cases 414
34 Suggestions for further research 419
35 Some reflections on policy relevance 422
