Making Meaning

Inference and Rhetoric in the Interpretation of Cinema

David Bordwell

Harvard University Press
Cambridge, Massachusetts
London, England
Contents

Preface xi

1. Making Films Mean 1
   Interpretation as Construction 1
   Meaning Made 8
   Interpretive Doctrines 13

2. Routines and Practices 19
   Interpretation, Inc. 21
   The Logic of Discovery, or, Problem-Solving 29
   The Logic of Justification, or, Rhetoric 34
   An Anatomy of Interpretation 40

3. Interpretation as Explication 43
   The French Connection 43
   Explication Academicized 48
   Picture Planes 53
   Meaning and Unity 64

4. Symptomatic Interpretation 71
   Culture, Dream, and Lauren Bacall 73
   Myth as Antinomy 78
   Système à la Mode 83
   The Contradictory Text 87
   Symptoms and Explications 94
11. Why
The 1
The 1

Not Inde

viii Contents

5. Semantic Fields  105
   Meanings in Structures   107
   Structures of Meaning    115
   The Role of Semantic Fields  127

6. Schemata and Heuristics  129
   Mapping as Making       129
   Knowledge Structures and Routines   135
   Mapping as Modeling     142

7. Two Basic Schemata  146
   Is There a Class for This Text?   146
   Making Films Personal   151

8. Text Schemata  169
   A Bull’s-Eye Schema   170
   Meaning, Inside Out and Outside In   181
   Textual Trajectories  186
   Doctrines into Diachronies   195

9. Interpretation as Rhetoric  205
   Sample Strategies   206
   Theory Talk   215

10. Rhetoric in Action: Seven Models of Psycho  224
   Jean Douchet, “Hitch and His Public” (1960)   224
   Robin Wood, “Psycho,” Hitchcock’s Films (1965)  226
   Raymond Durgnat, “Inside Norman Bates,”
      Films and Feelings (1967)   230
   V. F. Perkins, “The World and Its Image,”
      Film as Film (1972)   232
   Raymond Bellour, “Psychosis, Neurosis,
      Perversion” (1979)   235
   Barbara Klinger, “Psycho: The Institutionalization of Female
      Sexuality” (1982)   239
   Leland Poague, “Links in a Chain: Psycho and Film
      Classicism” (1986)   241