Reflections on the Futures of Marketing

Practice and Education

edited by Donald R. Lehmann and Katherine E. Jocz

Marketing Science Institute
Cambridge, MA
Contents

Editors’ Note .............................................................................................................. vii

Preface ....................................................................................................................... ix

Stephan H. Haackel

Part I: Trends

1. Janus and Marketing: The Past, Present, and Prospective Future of Marketing ........................................................................ 3

   Stephen A. Greyser

2. Looking Ahead at the Marketplace; It’s Global and It’s Changing ................................................................. 15

   John U. Farley

Part II: Organizational Responses and Implications

3. The Future Role of Marketing in the Organization ............................. 39

   Frederick E. Webster, Jr.

4. Aligning the Organization to the Market ............................................. 67

   George S. Day

Part III: Preparing for the Future

5. Future Prospects for Marketing Education ......................................... 97

   Robert D. Buzzell and Rajendra Sisodia
The e

to reflect

ccontribut

Science Inter

About the Contributors

About MSI

References

We can suggest that the multiple aspects of marketing are significant to reflect its multiple

At the interface of discipline and status? Which

We can suggest that the multiple aspects of marketing are significant to reflect its multiple

Then the accents....

vi

6. Some Thoughts on the Futures of Marketing

Donald R. Lehmann

About the Contributors

About MSI

References