Contents

Foreword ix
Preface by Edward Goldsmith xi

Introduction ........................................ 1

PART I The territorialist approach: towards local self-sustainable development ................................................................. 5

The metropolis form and deterritorialization ........................................ 7
Liberation from the constraints of territory: a short-term and barely sustainable historical event 8
The morphogenesis of the contemporary metropolis: hypertrophy and topophagy 11
Fordization and deterritorialization 14
From the factory city to the post.Fordist city: continuous deterritorialization 17

2 Beyond the metropolis form ........................................ 22
Is the metropolis form irreversible? 22
The new development-related poverties 26
The rebirth of the territory 30

3 The territory is not a beast of burden ...... 34
The functionalist approach or the theory of ecocompatibility 34
The environmentalist and biocentric approach 38

4 The territorialist approach ................... 41
Caring for the human environment 41
Interpreting long-term identity 44
Enhancing the identity of places 46
Making local society 47
From sustainability to sustainabilities 48

5 Local self-sustainable development ........................................ 55
'Development': from economic growth to well-being 55
'Local': place as heritage 56
'Self-sustainability': reuniting dweller and producer 65
6 The agents of change
Opposing energies 75 Bottom-up globalization: from a network of protest to earing networks of local societies 77
The social composition of the new movements: from class consciousness to place consciousness 78 The insurgent city: towards the public space of differences 80 New community practices 81 Local administrations and governing the economy: from marginality to centrality 84 Possible convergence between institutional policies and social practices 85

7 The statute of places
Territorial heritage and resources 89 Definitions of 'the statute of places' 90 Identity of place: description, interpretation and representation 91 Drafting the statute 94 An initial model of the statute and its parts 99 A planning process scheme for local self-sustainable development 107

PART 11 Visions of a strategic scenario.
Premise 113

8 Concrete utopia and strategic scenarios. 116
Recovering the role of utopia 1116 The proposed strategic scenario 1118 Scenario and planning 1120

9 Projects for open spaces: the landscape of the new farmers. 123
The territorial ecosystem 1123 Territorial ecosystems and agriculture 1129 The producers of the landscape and the environment 131

10 Cities of villages, cities of cities, networks of cities 137
Redefining the limits of the city 138 Producing complexity 1140 Establishing the primacy of a city for dwelling 1141 From the metropolitan city to the city of villages 1142 From the metropolitan region to the urban bioregion 1145 An example of the territorialization of rare services: the regional university system 1150 The central role of places with high territorial and environmental quality 1151 The refounding role of the historical territory 1153 A hill civilization 156
11 The New Municipium . . . . . . . . . . . . . . . . . . . 163
The municipalities' new tasks in the shift towards self-government 1163 The Charter for a New Municipium 1166 Alternative globalization: new institutes of democracy, ethical economics, the new city-rural world alliance and fair trade between regions 1168 Stages in the constituent process 1170
The actors in the constituent process: ethical and fair trading versus the commercial and profit-making economy 1171
Appendix: Charter for a New Municipium 1173

12 Towards the construction of the urban village: from the hypermarket to marketing networks for local products 180
From the supermarket to the hypermarket: a further step towards unsustainable development 1180 Is the wad from the supermarket to the hypermarket irreversible? 1182
Small retailers as a driving force for local development 1184

13 Local projects and the South of the world: from co-operation to the development of fair trade. . . . . . . . . . . . . . 187
Changes in approaches to co-operation 1187 New co-operation, new problems 1189

14 The local project: summing up a political vision 194
Making local society 1194 From class consciousness to place consciousness 1195 The statute of places: a 'constitutional' pact to develop the territorial heritage 1197 New statutes of citizenship 1198 The new municipium to 'govern' the local project 1199 Towards bottom-up globalization 1201

References 1204
Index 1213