Transnational Challenges to National History Writing

Edited by

Matthias Middell
Professor of Cultural History, University of Leipzig, Germany and

Lluis Roura
Professor of Modern History, Autonomous University of Barcelona, Spain
Contents

Acknowledgments vii
Notes on Contributors ix

1 The Various Forms of Transcending the Horizon of National History Writing
Matthias Middell and Lluis Roura 1

2 Comparison and Transfer: A Question of Method
Michel Espagne 36

3 The Writing of World History in Europe from the Middle of the Nineteenth Century to the Present: Conceptual Renewal and Challenge to National Histories
Matthias Middell and Katja Naumann 54

4 Area Studies and the Writing of Non-European History in Europe
Andreas Eckert 140

5 Imperial History
Anne Friedrichs and Mathias Mesenhöller 164

6 Colonization, Decolonization, and Imperial Historiography in the Iberian Peninsula
Lluis Roura 202

7 À la Recherche d'Histoire Imperiale: Histories of Russia from the Nineteenth to the Early Twenty-First Century
Martin Aust 229

8 Regional History as a “Challenge” to National Frameworks of Historiography: The Case of Central, Southeast, and Northern Europe
Diana Mishkova, Bo Stråth, and Balázs Trencsényi 257

9 The Canon of European History and the Conceptual Framework of National Historiographies
Antonis Liakos 315

10 The French Revolution and Its Historiographies
Jean-Clément Martin 343
vi Contents

11 Historians in the Storm: Émigré Historiography in the Twentieth Century
   Edoardo Tortarolo

12 How Regional, National, and Transnational History Has (Not) Been Written in Belgium: Reflections within a European Perspective
   Maarten Van Ginderachter and Geneviève Warland

13 A New Challenge to the Writing of History in Europe at the End of the Twentieth Century?
   Matthias Middell and Kaija Naumann

Selected Bibliographies

Index