The Economic Thought of Henry Calvert Simons
Crown Prince of the Chicago School

G.R. Steele
Contents

Preface

1 Introduction
   1.1 Henry Simons 1
   1.2 The Chicago School 4
   1.3 Fiscal policy 6
   1.4 October 1929 8
   1.5 Money matters 10

2 Libertarian Philosophy
   2.1 Liberalism 14
   2.2 Simons and Hayek 14
   2.3 Private property 18
   2.4 Impediments to competition 19
   2.5 Market failure 23
   2.6 Consensus 24
   2.7 Libertarian utopianism 26
   2.8 Libertarian paternalism 28

3 Economics and the Chicago School
   3.1 Modern economics 32
   3.2 Economics and politics 33
   3.3 Credit: saving and bank finance 35
   3.4 Keynes's economics (interest rate determination) 36
   3.5 Keynes's economics (the income multiplier) 37
   3.6 The Chicago tradition 39

4 The Chicago Plan: the background
   4.1 The Federal Reserve 43
   4.2 A treasury and a central bank 44
viii Contents

4.3 US monetary policy in the 1920s 45
4.4 Complacency 46
4.5 Unemployment and Keynes 47
4.6 The Norman Wait Harris Foundation Conference 50
4.7 The view from Harvard 51
4.8 March 1933: Roosevelt takes office 54
4.9 Appendix: the Harris Manifesto 55

5 The Chicago eight, plus four, plus one 59
5.1 Cox, Garfield (1893–1959) 59
5.2 Director, Aaron (1901–2004) 59
5.3 Douglas, Paul Howard (1892–1976) 60
5.4 Knight, Frank Hyneman (1885–1972) 60
5.5 Mints, Lloyd Winn (1888–1989) 61
5.6 Schultz, Henry (1893–1938) 61
5.7 Simons, Henry Calvert (1899–1946) 62
5.8 Viner, Jacob (1892–1970) 62
5.9 Gideonse, Harry D. (1901–1985) 62
5.10 Millis, Harry Alvin (1873–1948) 63
5.11 Wright, Chester Whitney (1879–1966) 63
5.12 Yntema, Theodore Otte (1900–1985) 63
5.13 Soddy, Frederick (1877–1956) 63

6 The Chicago Plan 66
6.1 US money and banking 66
6.2 Fractional reserve banking 67
6.3 The Plan 68
6.4 A federal monetary authority 72
6.5 The Plan: Lauchlin Currie 73
6.6 The Plan: Irving Fisher 74
6.7 The Plan: Maynard Keynes 75
6.8 The Plan: Jacob Viner 77
6.9 The Plan: Milton Friedman 78
6.10 Summary thoughts 82

7 Monetary rules 85
7.1 Monetary reform (1936) 87
7.2 The Great Depression 88
7.3 Sovereign expenditure 89
7.4 A significant divide 91
7.5 Raise expenditure or cut taxation? 92
7.6 Involuntary unemployment and make-work schemes 93
7.7 The concept of fiscal monetarism 94
7.8 Moneys, practical moneys and near moneys 95
7.9 Concerns about Keynes 97
7.10 A rules-based system 98
7.11 Monetary reform (2015/2016) 100

8 Monetarism and Fiscal Monetarism 107
8.1 Revolution in economics 107
8.2 The quantity theory of money 109
8.3 A Chicago monetary tradition 109
8.4 Fiscal Monetarism 112
8.5 Ricardian equivalence 115
8.6 The Treasury view 116
8.7 Broad money and its credit counterparts 118

9 Business, bankers and bubbles 124
9.1 Mainstream economics 124
9.2 Minsky moments 126
9.3 The Great Moderation 130
9.4 Monetary policy activism: interest rates 132
9.5 Austrian business cycle theory 135
9.6 Assets and investments 137
9.7 Shadow banking 138

10 Taxation 145
10.1 Motivation 145
10.2 Evolution, not revolution 146
10.3 Equal sacrifice? 147
10.4 Tracts for the times 149
10.5 The base and the rates 150
10.6 Reform 154
10.7 Variable income 157
10.8 Final thoughts 158

11 Islamic banking and finance 162
11.1 Central bank independence 162
11.2 Banking structures 162
11.3 Yields: a Keynesian perspective 164
11.4 Yields: an Islamic perspective 165
11.5 Islamic banking: base money 166
12 Final comments
12.1 Markets and mayhem 173
12.2 Regulation and trust 176
12.3 Keynesian options 177
12.4 Monetary reform 178
12.5 Economics moves on 180
12.6 The epoch of aggregate demand management 183
12.7 Friedman's Chicago revival 184
12.8 Boom and bust 186
12.9 Economic policy: models and practice 187

Index