

Technology, Industrial Conflict, and the Development of Technical Education in 19th-Century England

B. P. CRONIN

Ashgate

Aldershot • Burlington USA • Singapore • Sydney

Contents

List of figures, boxes and tables	ix
Preface	xi
Abbreviations	xiv
Introduction	1
1 Nineteenth-century machine tools: the work of Maudslay, Nasmyth and Whitworth	11
2 The interaction of work and technology: the influence of F. W. Taylor and H. Braverman	40
3 Technology, changing definitions of skill and the use of child labour	72
4 Skill and the collapse of the craft apprentice system	98
5 Employers and the ideology of engineering management: the Great Strike of 1897–8 and its aftermath	124
6 Contradictions and struggle in ideas about a national system of technical education	162
7 Employers, the foundation of the City and Guilds of London Institute and government legislation	195
8 Industrial conflict and 19th-century technical and educational change	233
References and Bibliography	257
Index	291