Anika Liversage

Finding a Path

Labour Market Life Stories of Immigrant Professionals

CBS / Copenhagen Business School
PhD-program in Organizational Analyses, POA
PhD Series 34.2005
Table of Contents

- PRELUDE ........................................................................................................................................... 8
  - The story of Mina .................................................................................................................................. 10

- CHAPTER 1 - INTRODUCTION ............................................................................................................ 19
  - INTRODUCTION .................................................................................................................................. 19
  - Backdrop of the project: immigrants and the labour market ................................................................. 20
    - A need for research on processes ........................................................................................................... 22
    - Research focus: High-skilled immigrants from Eastern Europe .......................................................... 23
    - Choice of method – the life story interview ............................................................................................. 25
    - The research question ............................................................................................................................... 25
    - The structure of this study – the theoretical part ....................................................................................... 28
    - The structure of this study – the empirical part ....................................................................................... 29

- CHAPTER 2 - METHOD ......................................................................................................................... 31
  - METHOD – STORIES IN SPACE AND TIME ......................................................................................... 31
    - Introduction .......................................................................................................................................... 31
    - A method for investigating situated courses of action ......................................................................... 31
    - A short history of life story interviews in sociology .................................................................................. 32

  - The major fault line in analytical approaches ....................................................................................... 35
    - Metaphors of analysis: “Flares vs. Fireworks” ....................................................................................... 37
    - Two approaches to analysis – using the stories of Nader and Ali .......................................................... 38
    - Nader’s Story ......................................................................................................................................... 39
    - Ali’s story ............................................................................................................................................. 40
    - Ali and Nader – strikingly similar lives to tell about .............................................................................. 41
    - How to determine the “facts” in a life story? ............................................................................................ 43

  - Pragmatic individualism as a basis ........................................................................................................ 45
    - Embodiment as central to the analytical strategy .................................................................................... 47
    - “Bricolage” – but of what materials? ....................................................................................................... 50
    - On omissions and distortions ................................................................................................................... 53
    - Back to the analytical strategy ................................................................................................................ 56
    - An alternative metaphor: “Retina Photographs” .................................................................................... 57

- Summing up ............................................................................................................................................ 58
CHAPTER 3 – CONCEPTUAL APPROACH

CONCEPTUAL APPROACH

Introduction

First key concepts: identification / categorization

Inspiration – American pragmatism and symbolic interactionism
Conceptual choice: “Identity” vs. “identification / categorization”
Multiple different categories for identification and categorization
Groups and boundaries
Boundaries and the labour market
Empirical investigations of crossing (labour market) boundaries
Investigations of embedding inside labour market boundaries

Second key concept: Trajectory

The spatial aspects of the coordinates of embodied individuals
Interlude: Metaphorical construction of “life as a path”
Bourdieu – a brief introduction to space
Bourdieu – a brief introduction to time
Location and sense of place
Location and the power of words
Accent – a persistent marker of non-Danishness
Discussions of using Bourdieu in the present context

On processes

The synthesis between Bertaux and Jenkins
Returning to Mina

Summing up

CHAPTER 4 – CONCRETE ANALYTICAL STRATEGY

CONCRETE ANALYTICAL STRATEGY

Introduction

Constructing trajectories in time-geographical notation

The making of the diagrams

Investigation of identification / categorization: Narrativist tools

First tool: The teller vs. the protagonist
Second tool: Dense passages of dramatized speech
Getting to the analytical strategy

On making and using the interviews

Sampling of interviewees
Present knowledge of the group
CHAPTER 5 – THREE PATHS INTO HIGHER LEVEL WORK

THREE PATHS INTO HIGHER LEVEL WORK

Path no.1 – the path of re-entry

Stanislaw, who was “...very fortunate that [he] came to Denmark”

Finding professional work
Geographical – not professional - mobility
Similarity and professional acceptance: Re-entry of Marta, the doctor
Processes of identification / categorization and trajectory shape
Comparison with the story of the lawyer Mina

Path no. 2 – the path of ascent

Kamilla, who simply “refuse[d] to start all over again!”

Getting legal permission to stay in Denmark
Learning Danish - the struggle over where to do so
Where to head for after language school?
Time in the space of the day high-school
Getting low-level work in the local school
Changing to medium level work with immigrants
Processes of identification / categorization and trajectory shape
Comparison with the story of the lawyer Mina

Path no. 3 – the path of re-education

Vera, who needed “...time to realize [she] had to start all over”

Vera’s turning point
Passage I – initial state outside labour market
Passage II – the lives of two friends
Passage III – “the moment of truth”
Passage IV – changing direction
Vera’s story continued – evaluations of her re-education
The importance of social spaces for individual biographies
(Life) time as an investment
Disrupted talk
Processes of identification / categorization and trajectory shape
CHAPTER 6 – TWO PATHS REMAINING OUTSIDE GOOD WORK

TWO PATHS REMAINING OUTSIDE GOOD WORK

Path no. 4 – the path of re-migration

Helena who did not “...have the power to fight”
Starting life in Denmark
Categorizations in the labour market – rejections abound
Change of path – return to Rumania
Processes of identification / categorization and trajectory shape
A contrasting case: Pija who “...could not go back”

Path no. 5 – the path of marginalization

Slavenka, the biologist “...hanging... in the air”
The background in Bosnia – the coming of a war
Life in Denmark – the first years
Not really moving ahead after all
Where to head?
Still a biologist – or not?
Re-migration: a potential line of action?
Processes of identification / categorization and trajectory shape

CHAPTER 7 – PATHS AND BOUNDARIES

PATHS AND BOUNDARIES

Introduction
On and off work
Re-entry: The desired way
Recognition of qualifications
Drazena—a lawyer re-entering in the nick of time
Comparison – high-skilled immigrants in Israel and Italy
Importance of both national context and profession

When the path ahead is blocked – stories from limbo
Same limbo predicament – different solutions
Paths and passages
Remaining in limbo – the path to marginalization
Summing up

A ”multi-cultural segment” in the labour market
The importance of identification with high-level work
CHAPTER 8 - CONCLUSION

CONCLUSION

“Professional”, “immigrant” – and processes of access

The realist – narrativist divide revisited

Postlude

English abstract

Dansk resumé

Appendix A: Trajectories and biographical profiles

LIST OF REFERENCES