Exploring Marx’s Capital

Philosophical, Economic and Political Dimensions

by
Jacques Bidet

Translated by David Fernbach

Foreword to the English Edition by Alex Callinicos

BRILL

LEIDEN • BOSTON
2007
Contents

Foreword to the English Translation of Jacques Bidet's
Que faire du 'Capital'? by Alex Callinicos ............................................ ix

Author's Preface to the English Edition .............................................. xvii

Introduction ......................................................................................... 1

Chapter 1
Preliminary Methodological Remarks ................................................. 5
1. Pathways: 1857 to 1875 ................................................................. 5
2. The history of science perspective .................................................. 8
3. The perspective of reconstruction of the system .............................. 9

Chapter 2
Value as Quantity ................................................................................ 11
1. Constructing a homogeneous economic space: a Marxian project that breaks with political economy .................................................. 12
2. Paralogisms of Marx the measurer .................................................. 14
3. Capital: the categories of measurement undermine the theorisation of the substance to be measured .................................................... 16
4. In what sense does more productive labour produce more value?
   The articulation of structure and dynamic ..................................... 20
5. Skilled labour as a zone of paralogism .......................................... 21
6. Intensity: closure and fracture of the quantitative space ............... 30
   Conclusion ....................................................................................... 35

Chapter 3
Value as Sociopolitical Concept ......................................................... 37
1. Value as expenditure ....................................................................... 38
2. 'Transformation of expenditure into consumption of labour-power' 45
3. Money and labour-value constitute one and the same point of rupture between Marx and Ricardo 52
4. Value and capital as semi-concepts 56
5. Value and socialisation of labour: Marx's inconsistent socialism 62
6. Labour-value and the state 67

Conclusion 70

Chapter 4

Value and Price of Labour-Power 74
1. A non-normative problematic of the norm 77
2. Movements of value and movements of price 84
3. The non-functionalist character of the system: its 'openness' 91
4. A hierarchy of values of labour-power? 94

Conclusion 99

Chapter 5

Relations of Production and Class Relations 103
1. Productive and unproductive labour 104
2. Production and social classes 123

Conclusion 129

Chapter 6

The Start of the Exposition and Its Development 132
1. The question of the initial moment of Capital 133
2. The 'transition to capital' 153

Conclusion 166

Chapter 7

The Method of Exposition and the Hegelian Heritage 169
1. On the method of exposition of Capital 170
2. Hegel, an epistemological support/obstacle 183

Conclusion 193

Chapter 8

The Theorisation of the Ideological in Capital 196
1. The place of everyday consciousness: Volume 3 197
Contents

2. The uncertainties in Marx's exposition ................................................. 209
3. The 'raisons d'être' of the form of appearance (in Volume One) ................. 217
   Conclusion ......................................................................................... 228

Chapter 9

The Theory of the Value-Form ......................................................... 231
1. Why the historical or logico-historical interpretation cannot be relevant ..................................................................................... 232
2. The notion of form or expression of value, as distinct from the notion of relative value .................................................................. 235
3. Epistemological history of Chapter 1, Section 3 ................................. 244
4. What dialectic of the form of value? ............................................... 250
5. The expression of value 'in use-value' ............................................ 255
6. Fetishism, a structural category of the ideology of commodity production ...................................................................................... 260
   Conclusion ....................................................................................... 269

Chapter 10

The Economy in General and Historical Materialism ....................... 272
1. The various generalities that Capital presupposes ............................ 273
2. Labour-value in pure economics and in historical materialism ............. 288
   Conclusion ....................................................................................... 304

General Conclusions ........................................................................ 307

References ...................................................................................... 319