PRODUCT INNOVATION, CONSUMER HETEROGENEITY, AND MARKET GROWTH
A theoretical discussion and empirical analyses

Dissertation
Zur Erlangung des akademischen Grades
Doctor rerum politicarum
(Dr. rer. pol.)

vorgelegt dem Rat der Wirtschaftswissenschaftlichen Fakultät
der Friedrich-Schiller-Universität Jena

am 31.05.2006

von Diplom-Wirtschaftsingenieur Alexander Frenzel Baudisch
CONTENTS

CHAPTER 1: INTRODUCTION

CHAPTER 2: PRODUCT INNOVATION, CONSUMER HETEROGENEITY, AND MARKET GROWTH. A theoretical discussion

1. Consumption growth and product variety – a review
2. How individuals learn to consume
3. Social processes on the demand side: Aggregating over learning consumers
4. Product innovation, consumer heterogeneity, and market growth: Five hypotheses
5. Conclusions

CHAPTER 3: CONTINUOUS MARKET GROWTH BEYOND FUNCTIONAL SATIATION. Time-Series Analyses of U.S. Footwear Consumption 1955-2002

1. The U.S. footwear market
2. Models and tests
3. Discussion
4. Conclusions

CHAPTER 4: FUNCTIONAL DEMAND SATIATION AND INDUSTRIAL DYNAMICS. The Emergence of the Global Value Chain for the U.S. Footwear Industry

1. Variety oversupply, market competition, and industrial organization
2. The dynamics of the U.S. footwear industry
3. Discussion
4. Conclusions

CHAPTER 5: CONSUMER HETEROGENEITY EVOLVING FROM SOCIAL GROUP DYNAMICS. Latent class analyses of German footwear consumption 1980-1991

1. The German footwear market
2. The model and results
3. Discussion and managerial implications

CHAPTER 6: CONCLUSIONS

REFERENCES