The Law and Consumer Credit Information in the European Community

The Regulation of Credit Information Systems

Federico Ferretti
Contents

Table of Cases  xi
Table of Legislation  xiii
Abbreviations  xv
Acknowledgements  xvii

Introduction  1

1 Consumer credit reporting in the economy: What is consumer credit reporting, and why is it used?  9

   Introduction  9
   Consumer credit reporting and Credit Reference Agencies  9
   The rationale for consumer credit reporting systems  12
   What information is collected, processed and disclosed to third parties?  15
   The trends: secondary uses of credit reference data  19
   Concluding remarks  29

2 The lack of a legal perspective  31

   Introduction  31
   Consumer credit reporting in the economic literature  32
   Institutional aspects and the literature in regulatory policy  37
   Literature in law  40
   Information asymmetry and consumers  42
   Remarks on the review of the literature  43
   The importance of legal research  45
   Concluding remarks  47

Table of Cases
Table of Legislation
Abbreviations
Acknowledgements
3 Historical background: the cultural framework. A lesson from history?

Introduction 49

Historical informal information-sharing mechanisms 51
The origins of credit information-sharing systems: business credit reporting in the US 53
Consumer credit reporting in the US 58
Consumer credit reporting in Europe 65
Lessons for the EC from history? 71
Concluding remarks 74

4 The institutional and legal standing in the EC: Is the EC missing a chance?

Introduction 77

European markets in consumer credit 78
Institutional framework 81
European consumer credit reporting markets 85
European cross-border exchange of information 89
Structural impediments for a European single market 92
The legal framework 93
Bank secrecy 94
Data protection 99
Consumer credit laws 103
Concluding remarks: missing a chance? 126

5 Reputation, privacy and the law: What rights and interests are at stake and to what extent are these conflicting?

Introduction 129

Reputation 130
The importance of data protection and the reasons for EC legislation 134
Problems relating to the implementation of Directive 95/46/EC 144
Concluding remarks 148

6 Legal compliance: What are the legal mechanisms upon which consumer credit reporting needs to rely?

Introduction 151
Data controllers 152
Fair and lawful data processing 154
Information to be given to data subjects 156
Criteria for making data processing legitimate 161
Specified, explicit and legitimate purposes of data processing and further processing 165
Adequacy, relevancy and reasonableness of data processing 167
Accuracy and updating of the data 170
Data retention period 173
Automated individual decisions 174
Concluding remarks 175

7 Conclusions

Introduction 177
Consent model 179
Other concerns 182
Secondary data processing purposes and consumer protection 184
Consent, privacy, EC consumer law and competition: further implications for consumer protection? 190
The paradox of consumer credit reporting systems 195
The European dimension 198
Concluding policy and institutional considerations 204

Appendix: Case studies

United Kingdom 209
Italy 213
Lesson from Italy? 223

Bibliography 225
Index 239