

Credit and Village Society in Fourteenth-Century England

by
Chris Briggs

*A British Academy
Postdoctoral Fellowship Monograph*

Published for THE BRITISH ACADEMY
by OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS

Contents

List of figures, maps and tables	ix
Acknowledgements	xi
Note on measurements, money, and the citation of manorial court rolls	xiii
List of abbreviations	xiv
1. Introduction: rural credit	1
1.1 Changing views of credit in the pre-industrial economy	3
1.2 Credit in rural England, 1275–1400	7
1.3 The evidence and its limitations	12
1.4 The villages studied	18
2. The forms of credit and their uses	29
2.1 Types of credit transaction	30
2.2 The uses of credit	43
2.3 The size of debts	57
2.4 Conclusion: the varied functions of credit	63
3. The formation of credit relationships	65
3.1 Information and intermediation	66
3.2 The loan term	68
3.3 Interest and usury	74
3.4 Security for credit	79
3.5 Conclusion: an effective system of oral credit transactions	95
4. Creditors and debtors	100
4.1 Litigation evidence and the identification of creditors and debtors	102
4.2 Village creditors and debtors within wider society	105
4.3 Women, parish clergy, and non-residents as creditors and debtors	112
4.4 Creditors and debtors: mutually exclusive groups?	130
4.5 Creditors and debtors compared by wealth	135
4.6 Conclusion: 'horizontal' credit	146

5. Credit and social relations	149
5.1 The impoverishment and exploitation of debtors: case studies	151
5.2 Temporary subletting and credit relations	156
5.3 Did debtors lose their land?	164
5.4 Did creditors accumulate debtors' land?	166
5.5 'Debt accumulation' and 'reciprocal indebtedness'	169
5.6 Conclusion: limits to impoverishment and exploitation through credit	173
6. The credit supply	176
6.1 Changes in credit supply: problems of the sources	178
6.2 Dearth and high prices	179
6.3 Mortality	193
6.4 Money supply	200
6.5 The credit supply, 1349–1400	205
6.6 Conclusion: local variation in the credit supply	210
Conclusion	214
Appendix 1: Some manor court debt entries, with translations	224
Appendix 2: Identifying individual creditors and debtors and their characteristics	228
Bibliography	234
Index	247