Corporate Power and Ownership in Contemporary Capitalism
The politics of resistance and domination

Susanne Soederberg
Contents

List of illustrations  xvi
Acknowledgements  xvii
Abbreviations  xviii

PART I
Introduction  1

1 Repoliticizing corporate power and ownership in contemporary capitalism  3

   Situating the study  6
   A brief history of corporate governance  8
   Repoliticizing corporate power and ownership: an alternative frame for understanding  12
   Structure of the book  17

PART II
Power and paradoxes of corporate power and mass investment  21

2 Repoliticizing the Ownership Society and the marketization of security  23

   The content of the Ownership Society: expanding new opportunities through the stock market  26
   Social Security and limited ownership: a brief history  29
   Motives for reconstructing social security capital  33
   Constructing a culture of dependency  36
   Expanded opportunities or increased insecurities? A closer look at the power of social security capital  39
   Conclusion  43
3 Repoliticizing corporate governance: scandals, struggles and the Sarbanes-Oxley Act

The official response to 'Enronitis': the corporate responsibility initiative and the SOX 48
Common-sense assumptions underpinning corporate governance 51
Deconstructing the common sense of the corporate governance doctrine 54
Conclusion 64

4 Deconstructing the myth of corporate democracy: the case of the equal access proposal

Reforming corporate governance: debating equal access 68
The analytical roots of corporate democracy: the splitting of ownership from control 74
Repoliticizing equal access 81
Conclusion 85

PART III
The changing forms of, and limits to, shareholder activism

5 The limits to labour’s capital and the new activism

The changing landscape of investment in Corporate America 90
Explaining the limits to labour’s capital 93
Transcending the weak corporate governance perspective 98
Transcending the myopic market explanation 103
Conclusion 109

6 Corporate governance and entrepreneurial development: the case of CalPERS’ Permissible Country Index

Neoliberalism and the rise of entrepreneurial development 113
The PCI and the shifting geography of development finance 117
Constructing discipline and dependency in emerging markets 127
Conclusion 136
7 The marketization of social justice: the case of the Sudan Divestment Campaign 138

SRI and the marketization of social justice 139
The marketization of the Sudan Divestment Campaign 144
Deconstructing the marketization of human rights 149
‘Giving karma, getting karma’: the implications of marketization 156
Concluding comments: new trends in depoliticizing corporate power and ownership 157

Notes 160
References 170
Index 187