China’s Rise in the World
ICT Industry
Industrial strategies and the catch-up development model

Lutao Ning
Contents

List of figures  vii
List of tables  viii
Preface  x
Acknowledgements  xiv
List of abbreviations  xvi

PART I
The role of the state in industrial and trade development  1

1 Introduction  3

2 Economic liberalization and industrial policies: the state’s role in economic development  12

PART II
The development pathway of the ICT industry, 1949–1993: creation, reform rationales and development context  43

3 Creation of the electronics industry: military-driven development, 1949–1978  45

4 The ‘opening up’ reform and state-led growth, 1978–1993  54

PART III
Making the ICT sector a ‘pillar’ industry: China’s catching up strategies since the early 1990s  77

5 The big business strategy and the small and medium-sized enterprise strategy  83

6 The ‘attracting in’ and ‘walking out’ trade and investment strategy  102
Contents

7 The ‘breaking through’ strategy of China’s ICT industry: dynamic technological catching up and challenges in developing the semiconductor sector 137

PART IV
Rethinking the notion of state intervention: lessons from and limitations of the Chinese experience 165

8 The development model for the Chinese ICT industry 167

9 Theory and policy lessons: rethinking China’s ICT development experience 177

Appendix 1 Definition of the Chinese ICT industry 186
Appendix 2 Relaxation of investment restrictions: market access in exchange for selected advanced technologies 195
Appendix 3 China’s foreign investment guidelines on the electronics and telecommunications industry 197
Appendix 4 The top 100 large domestic ICT firms ranked by the Ministry of the Information Industry (2004) 201

Notes 223
References 230
Index 246