

The Making of National Economic Forecasts

Edited by

Lawrence R. Klein

Benjamin Franklin Professor of Economics Emeritus, University of Pennsylvania, USA and 1980 Nobel Laureate in Economic Sciences

Edward Elgar

Cheltenham, UK • Northampton, MA, USA

Contents

List of contributors	vii
Preface	ix
1 Background to national economic forecasts and the high-frequency model of the USA Lawrence R. Klein	1
2 Forecasting the sustainability of China's economic performance: early twenty-first century and beyond Wendy Mak	27
3 The economic growth story in India: past, present and prospects for the future Sudip Ranjan Basu	69
4 High-frequency forecasting model for the Russian economy Vladimir Eskin and Mikhail Gusev	93
5 Short-term forecasting of key indicators of the German economy Andrei Roudoi	121
6 Mexico: current quarter forecasts Alfredo Coutiño	149
7 A high-frequency forecasting model and its application to the Japanese economy Yoshihisa Inada	172
8 The making of national economic forecasts: South Korea You Chan 'Kevin' Chung	198
9 Current quarter model for Turkey Süleyman Özmucur	245
10 Estimation of the US Treasury yield curve at daily and intra-daily frequency Lawrence R. Klein and Süleyman Özmucur	265

11	Using data and models at mixed frequencies in computation and forecasting Fyodor I. Kushnirsky	294
12	Using sentiment surveys to predict GDP growth and stock returns Giselle Guzmán	319
	Appendix: preliminary analysis of Brazil Andrei Roudoi	352
	Index	363