Richard B. McKenzie

Predictably Rational?

In Search of Defenses for Rational Behavior in Economics

Springer
Contents

1 Economists' "Irrational Passion for Dispassionate Rationality" ................. 1
   The Axioms of Rationality .......................................................... 5
   The Rationale for Given Wants ................................................... 8
   The Equality of Rational and Maximizing Behavior ......................... 12
   Rational Deductions and Predictions .......................................... 15
   Perfections in the Analysis of Scarcity ....................................... 16
   Concluding Comments .................................................................. 19

2 The Methodological Constraints on the Rationality Premise ................. 21
   The Constraints of Model Building and Hypothesis Testing on the Conception of Rationality .............................................. 21
   Theory of Knowledge and Rationality .......................................... 24
   Rationality as a Foundation for Process and Institution Analysis ........ 29
   Concluding Comments ................................................................. 31

3 Human Motivation and Adam Smith's "Invisible Hands" .................... 35
   Smith's Invisible Hand of Markets .............................................. 36
   Smith's Invisible Hand of Morality ............................................. 37
     Laudable Principles of Action ................................................... 38
   The Economic Role of the "Impartial Spectator" ............................. 42
   Smith's "Logic of Collective Action" ............................................ 42
   Smith's Sense of Balance in Behavioral Motivations ....................... 45
   Smith's Modern Market Deductions ............................................ 46
   Smith's Political Economy ......................................................... 48
   Smith's Expansive Political Economy ......................................... 50
   Smith's Supply-Side Economics ................................................. 50
   Smith's Fiscal Federalism ......................................................... 53
   Smith's Organizational Economics ............................................. 54
   Smith on Education ................................................................. 56
   Concluding Comments ............................................................. 59
4 Rationality in Economic Thought: From Thomas Robert Malthus to Alfred Marshall and Philip Wicksteed .......................... 63
Malthusian Constraints on “Rational Beings” ......................... 64
Ricardo’s Methodological Shift Toward Formalized Political Economy .... 69
Twixt Adam Smith and Alfred Marshall and the Marginal Revolution .... 74
Alfred Marshall and the Return of Varied Motivations .................. 76
Philip Wicksteed’s Unification of Personal and Business Decision Making .................................................. 82
Concluding Comments .................................................. 89

5 Rationality in Economic Thought: Frank Knight, Ludwig von Mises, Friedrich Hayek, and James Buchanan ......................... 93
Frank Knight and the Limits of Economic Science ..................... 94
Ludwig von Mises’ Hostility Toward Positivism ........................ 100
Friedrich Hayek’s Concern Over the Nature of The Economic Problem .... 106
James Buchanan, Rational Behavior, and Constitutional Economics .... 110
Concluding Comments .................................................. 111

6 Behavioral Economists, and Psychologists’ Challenges to Rational Behavior .................................................. 113
The Overall Dimensions of the Behavioral Challenge .................. 113
Prospect Theory .................................................. 118
Dominance and Invariance .......................................... 122
Mental Accounting .................................................. 124
Endowment Effect .................................................. 126
 Acquisition and Transaction Utility .................................. 128
The Matter of Sunk Costs .......................................... 129
Behavioral Finance .................................................. 131
Concluding Comments .................................................. 139

7 The Evolutionary Biology of Rational Behavior ......................... 141
Fitness, Variation, and Evolution .................................... 144
Natural and Sexual Selection ........................................ 147
Growth Spurt in the Human Brain Size ................................ 148
The Pleistocene-Conditioned Human Brain ............................ 149
Pleistocene-Conditioned Preferences for Sugar ......................... 150
Hard-Wired Mating Choices and Labor-Market Realities ............... 151
De Gustibus Non Est Disputandum, Perhaps at Some Level ............ 154
Evolution as the “Great Economizer” ................................ 155
The Unnatural Economic Way of Thinking ............................ 160
Evolutionary Conditioning and the Findings of Behavioral Economists .... 160
Rationality and Economic Education .................................. 163
Concluding Comments .................................................. 170

8 The Neuroeconomics of Rational Decision Making ..................... 175
Rationality and the Construction of the Human Brain .................. 179