1. TRAINING—CONCEPT, MEANING AND SCOPE
1.1 Understanding Training
1.1.1 Meaning and scope
1.1.2 Concept of training
1.1.3 Training and education
1.1.4 Training and teaching
1.2 Key Facets of Training
1.2.1 Participatory training
1.2.2 Facilitative training
1.3 Levels of Training
1.3.1 Individual-based training
1.3.2 Group-based training
1.3.3 Organisation-based training
1.4 Modes of Training
1.4.1 Face-to-face training
1.4.2 On-the-job training
1.4.3 Distance training
1.4.4 E-training
Recap of Key Learning Points of the Chapter

2. PROCESS OF LEARNING IN A TRAINING PROGRAMME
2.1 Learning in the Present-day World
2.2 Understanding Learning—Concept and Dimensions
2.2.1 Learning is a universal phenomenon
2.2.2 Learning as a lifelong pursuit
2.2.3 Learning under formal and informal conditions
2.2.4 Learning as a basis of an individual’s behaviour
2.2.5 Learning as an integrated process in an individual
2.2.6 Stimulation for learning
2.2.7 Learning is an evolutionary process
2.2.8 Learning as a shared undertaking
3. MAKING STAKEHOLDERS PARTNERS IN TRAINING

3.1 Stakeholders and Beneficiaries

3.2 Key Roles and Responsibilities of the Stakeholders
  3.2.1 Funding or sponsoring agency
  3.2.2 Organisations nominating participants
  3.2.3 Training agency
  3.2.4 Training team or trainers
  3.2.5 Participants

3.3 Contracting with the Stakeholders—Need and Scope
  3.3.1 Levels of contracting
  3.3.2 Contracting with the nominating organisations
  3.3.3 Contracting with the participants

Recap of Key Learning Points of the Chapter

4. STEPS IN PREPARING A TRAINING DESIGN

4.1 Origin of a Training Programme
  4.1.1 Initiative by a training agency
  4.1.2 Initiative by an organisation
  4.1.3 Initiative by a group of organisations

4.2 Identifying and Analysing Training Needs
  4.2.1 Understanding training needs
  4.2.2 Identifying training needs
  4.2.3 Analysing training needs

4.3 Setting out Programme Objectives
  4.3.1 Understanding programme objectives
  4.3.2 Need for setting programme objectives
  4.3.3 Establishing programme objectives—considerations and guidelines

4.4 Steps in Preparing the Action Plan for the Programme
  4.4.1 Identify programme contents
  4.4.2 Break up programme contents into sub-topics or modules
  4.4.3 Categorise contents into information, knowledge, competencies and attitudes
  4.4.4 Organise and sequence programme contents
  4.4.5 Determine learning outcomes for each sub-topic or module
  4.4.6 Decide on training methods and techniques
  4.4.7 Allocate time
  4.4.8 Decide on support materials, facilities and equipment
  4.4.9 Determine assignments for members of the training team
  4.4.10 Delegate responsibilities for management and administration
  4.4.11 Establish mechanism for monitoring and evaluation

4.5 Key Considerations in Designing a Programme
  4.5.1 Nominating organisations, their objectives and activities
4.5.2 Promoting the learning process 125
4.5.3 Training group 126
4.5.4 Maintaining momentum and pace of the programme 128
4.5.5 Building flexibility 128
4.5.6 Effective monitoring 129
4.5.7 Training team 129
4.5.8 Management and administration 130
4.5.9 Facilitating transfer of training to the organisation 130

4.6 Communicating Information on the Programme 130
Recap of Key Learning Points of the Chapter 132

5. DELIVERING AN ACTIVE AND PARTICIPATORY TRAINING PROGRAMME 134
5.1 Preparing for the Delivery of the Training Programme 136
5.1.1 Establishing contacts with the participants 136
5.1.2 Getting yourself ready for the programme 136
5.1.3 Infrastructural arrangements 139
5.1.4 Arrival of the participants 140

5.2 Beginning an Active and Participatory Programme 142
5.2.1 Opening the programme 142
5.2.2 Icebreakers and openers—role and scope 142
5.2.3 Bonding with the participants 144
5.2.4 Establishing participants' ownership of the programme 145
5.2.5 Blending the group into a cohesive entity 147
5.2.6 Empowering the training group 151

5.3 Delivering the Programme 158
5.3.1 Establishing and maintaining conducive learning climate 158
5.3.2 Delivering the programme—some key tasks 163
5.3.3 Using question–response approach for enhancing participation 168

5.4 Evaluating the Programme 187
5.5 Concluding the Programme 188
5.5.1 Recalling and consolidating learning 188
5.5.2 Clarifying lingering doubts and queries 189
5.5.3 Getting back to the family and work 190
5.5.4 Saying goodbye to the group members 191
5.5.5 Some more sample exercises for the concluding session 191
Recap of Key Learning Points of the Chapter 192

6. TRAINING METHODS AND TECHNIQUES 194
6.1 Importance of Training Methods 195
6.1.1 Functions of training methods 196
6.2 Factors Influencing Choice of Training Methods
6.2.1 Pressures on the trainer in selecting a method
6.2.2 Learning objectives for the sub-topic or the module
6.2.3 Special characteristics of the training group
6.2.4 Time allotted for the sub-topic, module or the session
6.2.5 Level of competence of the trainer in its use
6.2.6 Availability of required facilities and resources
6.2.7 Style preferences of the trainer
6.2.8 Ease of presentation
6.2.9 Stage of the programme

6.3 Lecture as a Method of Training
6.3.1 Why and when to use the method
6.3.2 Why and when not to use the method
6.3.3 Enhancing its usefulness

6.4 Case Study Method
6.4.1 Objectives of the method
6.4.2 Guidelines for using the method
6.4.3 Guidelines for writing a case study
6.4.4 Presentation and discussion of the case study
6.4.5 Limitations of case study as a method of training

6.5 Role-Play as a Method of Training
6.5.1 Objectives of role-play
6.5.2 Case study and role-play—a comparison
6.5.3 When to use role-play
6.5.4 Essential elements of role-play
6.5.5 Types of role-play
6.5.6 Planning role-play—some guidelines
6.5.7 Commencement of the role-play
6.5.8 Directing action—guidelines for the trainer
6.5.9 Conducting the feedback session and closing the exercise
6.5.10 Limitations of the method in training

6.6 Management Games
6.6.1 Major objectives
6.6.2 Design and methodology of organising the games
6.6.3 Conducting the game

6.7 Laboratory Training
6.7.1 Goals and outcomes
6.7.2 Factors affecting laboratory training
6.7.3 Conditions for laboratory training
6.7.4 Role of the trainer

6.8 Individual and Group Practical Assignments
6.8.1 Role of the trainer
6.8.2 Advantages of the method 250
6.8.3 Writing assignments 251

6.9 Group Discussion as a Method of Training 251
6.9.1 Objectives of group discussion 252
6.9.2 Guidelines for organising group discussion 253
6.9.3 Limitations of the method 257

6.10 Panel Discussion 257
6.10.1 Suitability of the method 258
6.10.2 Selection of the panellists 258
6.10.3 Contents of the presentation 258
6.10.4 Physical arrangements 258
6.10.5 Role of the moderator 258
6.10.6 Inadequacies of the method 259

6.11 Brainstorming 259
6.11.1 Objectives of the method 260
6.11.2 Steps in organising a brainstorming session 260

6.12 Preparing and Using Training Support Materials 261
6.12.1 Audio-visual materials 262
6.12.2 Printed materials 265
6.12.3 Developing training support materials 267

6.13 Training through Placements 268
6.13.1 Preparing for the placement 269

6.14 Field Trip as a Method of Training 271
6.14.1 Organising a field trip 271

6.15 Demonstrations 273
6.15.1 Advantages of a demonstration 273
6.15.2 Disadvantages of a demonstration 273
6.15.3 Characteristics of a quality demonstration 274
6.15.4 Preparing for a demonstration 274

Recap of Key Learning Points of the Chapter 274

7. TRAINING GROUP AND ITS DYNAMICS 277
7.1 Special Features of Training group 278
7.2 Functional Behaviour in Training group 280
7.2.1 Willingness and ability to provide feedback 280
7.2.2 Interventions during a session or presentation 281
7.2.3 Assisting the trainers in organising training activities 281
7.2.4 Giving support and encouragement to other participants 282
7.2.5 Helping in maintaining discipline in the group 282
7.2.6 Assisting in maintaining group harmony 282
7.2.7 Completing assignments and projects 282
Contents

7.3 Dysfunctional Behaviour in Training Group
7.3.1 Dysfunctional behaviour during a training activity
7.3.2 Undermining the group process or the learning environment
7.3.3 Strategy to deal with dysfunctional behaviour
7.4 Types of Participants
7.4.1 Learner
7.4.2 Self-seeker
7.4.3 Detached and disinterested
7.4.4 Socialiser
7.4.5 Tourist
7.4.6 Critic or fault-finder
7.4.7 Know-all
7.4.8 Hesitant or shy
7.4.9 Monopolist or dominator
7.5 Stages of Development of Training Group
7.5.1 Key elements in the group process
7.5.2 Stages of development in a training group
Recap of Key Learning Points of the Chapter

8. THE TRAINER—ROLES AND FUNCTIONS

8.1 Trainer—the Person
8.1.1 Trainer’s needs vs participants’ needs
8.2 Portrait of a Trainer—Four Key Dimensions
8.2.1 Values of a trainer
8.2.2 Roles of a trainer
8.2.3 Competencies of a trainer
8.2.4 Qualities of a trainer
8.3 Training Styles of a Trainer
8.3.1 Training style—meaning, scope and dynamics
8.3.2 Determinants of training style
8.3.3 Constituents of training style
8.3.4 Evolving a functional training style
8.4 Dilemmas of a Trainer
8.4.1 Popularity with the participants vs effectiveness in training
8.4.2 Move with the rhythm of the group or adhere to the schedule
8.4.3 Degree of relative emphasis on group or individual needs
8.4.4 Degree of control of the training process to the participants
8.4.5 Opting for quality participation by a few or wider participation
8.4.6 Timing and nature of intervention in the group processes
8.4.7 Nature of relationship with the participants
8.5 Handling Problem Situations
   8.5.1 Some sample situations and trainer’s response 343
   8.5.2 General strategy to deal with problem situations 349

8.6 Preparing and Conducting a Presentation or Training Activity 352
   8.6.1 Preparing for a presentation or training activity 352
   8.6.2 Attributes of an effective presentation 356

8.7 Working in a Team—Some Key Elements 362
   8.7.1 Clarity on team objectives 363
   8.7.2 Proper allocation of roles and responsibilities 364
   8.7.3 Sound working procedures and norms of functioning 364
   8.7.4 Sound interpersonal relations 364
   8.7.5 Regular review of work 365

Recap of Key Learning Points of the Chapter 366

9. EVALUATION OF A TRAINING PROGRAMME 369
   9.1 Evaluation—Need and Purposes 371
      9.1.1 Need for evaluation 371
      9.1.2 Purposes of evaluation 372
   9.2 Stages of Evaluation in a Training Programme 373
      9.2.1 Pre-training evaluation 374
      9.2.2 Ongoing evaluation during the programme 376
      9.2.3 End-programme evaluation 378
      9.2.4 Post-training evaluation 378
   9.3 Conducting the End-term Evaluation 379
      9.3.1 Difficulties in end-term evaluation 380
      9.3.2 Ascertaining reactions of the participants 382
      9.3.3 Participants’ learning from the programme 386
   9.4 Measuring Participants’ Learning 386
      9.4.1 Measurement of knowledge 387
      9.4.2 Measurement of competencies/skills 393
      9.4.3 Measurement of changes in attitudes and values 394
