The Politics of Rural Reform in China
State policy and village predicament in the early 2000s

Christian Göbel
Contents

| Illustrations | ix |
| Tables        | xi |
| Acknowledgements | xii |
| Abbreviations | xiii |

1 The peasant burden and the dynamics of rural reform and development 1

- The Rural Tax and Fee Reform 2
- Explaining the policy outcomes 4
- Principals and agents 5
- Competition under hierarchy in China 8
- The argument 11

2 Bureaucratic sprawl, government debt and the peasant burden: how serious? 14

- The cost of an expanding bureaucracy 14
- Growth and composition of liabilities 20
- The peasant burden problem 28
- Conclusion 32

3 The institutional sources of the peasant burden 34

- Functional division of labour 35
- Fiscal delegation 43
- Political decentralization 51
- Conclusion 53

4 The limited agendas: the peasant burden and rural fiscal reform 55

- Narrating the peasant burden 55
- The rural fiscal reform agenda 63
- Conclusion 75
Contents

5 From innovation networks to competition under hierarchy 77
   Different approaches to rural fiscal reform 77
   Policy formulation 80
   Competition under hierarchy: refining the Rural Tax and Fee Reform 85
   Impact on central–local relations 91
   Conclusion 92

6 Reform implementation and ad-hoc policy innovation 94
   Anhui Province pilot phase 95
   Expansion phase 108
   Abolition of the agricultural tax 124
   Conclusion 127

7 Impacts and outcomes: the case of Anhui Province 130
   Aggregate development of peasant income and government finance 131
   The structural determinants of peasant income and government revenue 135
   Explaining the changes in peasant income and government finances 137
   Expenditures 142
   Conclusion 147

8 Why the 'Third Rural Revolution' failed 149
   A model of the Rural Tax and Fee Reform process 149
   Methodological reflection 157
   Outlook 158

Appendix Interviewees 160
Notes 163
Bibliography 195
Index 212