Riding the wave: high prices, big business?
The role of multinationals in the international grain markets

Gerdien Meijerink
Myrtille Danse

Report 2009-031
May 2009
Project code 40789
LEI Wageningen UR, The Hague
Contents

Preface 6
Summary 7
Samenvatting 12

1 Introduction 17

2 Background: overview of the international grain markets and positions 19
   2.1 Introduction 19
   2.2 Global grain production and trade 19
   2.3 Historic price trends of the global grain sector 27
   2.4 Projections of future price fluctuations 30
   2.5 Conclusions 37

3 Increasing market concentration 38
   3.1 Introduction 38
   3.2 Background: horizontal and vertical integration 38
   3.3 Overview of the main MNEs operating in international grain trade 39
   3.4 Food clusters 45
   3.5 Conclusion 51

4 Supply chain linkages 52
   4.1 Introduction 52
   4.2 The global grain supply chain: a few large MNE and many farmers 52
   4.3 Sub-Saharan Africa: a different situation 54
   4.4 Conclusion 60

5 Influence of speculation and MNEs on price setting 62
   5.1 Introduction 62
   5.2 Role of financial markets and speculation 62
   5.3 High commodity prices and MNE profits 68
   5.4 Conclusion 76
Conclusions and recommendations
6.1 Overview of the international grain markets and positions
6.2 Increasing market concentration
6.3 Supply chain linkages
6.4 Influence of speculation and MNEs on price setting

References