Ingo Pies, Alexandra von Winning, Markus Sardison, Katrin Girlich

Sustainability in the Petroleum Industry: Theory and Practice of Voluntary Self-Commitments

Business Ethics Study Nr. 2010-1

The Chair of Business Ethics
at Martin-Luther-University Halle-Wittenberg, edited by Ingo Pies,
Halle 2010
Contents

Executive Summary .................................................................................................................. iv
Contents .................................................................................................................................. viii
List of Figures .......................................................................................................................... x
List of Tables ............................................................................................................................ x
List of Abbreviations ................................................................................................................ xi

Introduction: Sustainability in the Petroleum Industry: Theory and Practice of Voluntary Self-Commitments ................................................................................................. 1

Chapter 1: On the Theory of Voluntary Self-Commitments: A Business
Ethics Perspective ..................................................................................................................... 6
1.1 Paradigms for the Perception of Voluntary Self-Commitments ........................................ 9
1.2 The Win-Win Potential of Voluntary Self-Commitments .................................................. 11
1.3 The Functionality of Voluntary Self-Commitments .......................................................... 15

Chapter 2: On the Practical Experience With Voluntary Self-Commitments:
Best-Practice Projects by Oil Companies Engaging in Sustainability ...................... 20
2.1 The Ecological Dimension ................................................................................................. 21
  2.1.1 Individual Self-Commitments to Environmental Protection .................................... 22
  2.1.2 Collective Self-Commitments to Environmental Protection .................................. 31
  2.1.3 Commitment Services for Environmental Protection ............................................. 35
2.2 The Social Dimension ........................................................................................................ 37
  2.2.1 Individual Self-Commitments to Human Rights and Working Conditions ............ 39
  2.2.2 Collective Self-Commitments to Human Rights and Working Conditions ............ 42
  2.2.3 Commitment Services for Human Rights and Working Conditions .................... 43
2.3 The Governance Dimension .............................................................................................. 48
  2.3.1 Individual Self-Commitments to Better Structures and Processes ....................... 49
  2.3.2 Collective Self-Commitments to Better Structures and Processes ....................... 55
  2.3.3 Binding Services for Better Structures and Processes ............................................. 56
Chapter 3: On the Functionality of Voluntary Self-Commitments by the Petroleum Industry: Lessons from Theory and Practice

3.1 Lessons Learned: Developing Voluntary Self-Commitments in the Petroleum Industry

3.2 Lessons to be Learned: How to Promote Voluntary-Self Commitments in the Petroleum Industry

Conclusion

Bibliography