6 The task ahead

6.1 Linking will become increasingly unavoidable

6.2 The task: to be more development-oriented, more specific and broader

6.3 The first consequence: being more development-oriented

6.3.1 Growth

6.3.2 What about water supply, education and healthcare?

6.3.3 And what about security and stability?

6.4 The second consequence: being more specific

6.4.1 Country and regional differentiation

6.4.2 Diagnostic approach

6.4.3 Choice of instruments

6.5 The third consequence: being broader

6.6 A dual strategy for development

7 Being more specific: professionalizing aid

7.1 Appropriate aid modalities

7.2 Supporting governments

7.3 Other actors: NGOs for development

7.4 Other actors: businesses for development

7.5 Other actors: citizens for development

7.6 Programme aid

7.7 Doing good can and must be done better

8 A broader perspective: looking beyond aid

8.1 Multilateral aid

8.2 Coherence for development

8.3 International public goods

8.4 Global governance

8.5 Beyond ‘international cooperation’

9 Conclusion

9.1 Development more central

9.2 Professionally organized development

9.3 Beyond classical aid

9.4 Less pretension, more ambition
